CUMMINGS TRYING TO END HEARINGS ON COURT SCHEME, WHEELER CHARGES

Senator Says Attorney-General Wants to Keep Congress From Getting People's View on Vital Question.

CITES WEAKNESS OF NEW DEAL'S SIDE

Administration Must Rely for Witnesses on Office Holders and Lawyers Waiting for Judicial Jobs, He Asserts.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, April 3—Senator Wheeler (Dem.), Montana accused Attorney-General Cummings today of trying to shut off Senate hearings on the Roosevelt court remaking scheme and "thereby preventing Congress from obtaining the views of the American people on the most important constitutional question raised since the Civil War."

"The Attorney-General will perform sufficient service if he will but limit his activities to his own department and leave Congress free to conduct its own legislative functions," the Montana Senator said in an unusually blunt statement.

The statement was issued while the Senate Judiciary Committee was in recess over Sunday, after four weeks of hearings on the court proposal.

Ashurst Repeats Stand.

Chairman Ashurst (Dem.), Arizona announced that opponents would have all next week and the succeeding week if they chose. He denied exerting pressure to bring the hearings to a close.

"Whenever the committee wants to close the hearings it will be over my protest," the committee chairman said. "I couldn't with any degree of equanimity meet the charge that the hearings were shut off. I want to be able to say that no strong arm methods were used."

Following the course he has pursued throughout the controversy over the bill, Ashurst contended that delay on the measure was "not only good strategy, but is right."

"There will be nothing tending toward a hurry-up," he asserted. "The bill grows stronger all the time."

Ashurst said it was "beginning to look like the hearings will end some time during the latter part of April."

'Hired Help' Sent to Capital.

Wheeler, in his statement, said he was "amazed to discover that the Attorney-General of the United States is urging the Senate Judiciary Committee to close its public hearings."

"Evidence of the Attorney-General's strategy on this issue," he added, "is revealed by the activity of the hired help he sends daily to the Capitol with instructions to be conveyed to members of the Senate Judiciary Committee."

Wheeler did not mention any names, but committee members quickly recalled the Joseph B. Keenan, Assistant Attorney-General, had been in almost constant attendance at the hearings.

Keenan recently denied charges by Senator Holt (Dem.), West Virginia, that he had discussed a judicial appointment with the Senator in order to win him over on the court fight.

"Outspoken Condemnation."

Wheeler said there was "no doubt that the Attorney-General would like to close public hearings on this issue."

"For one thing," he added, "the American people are outspoken in their condemnation of this plan to pack the court in order to secure tainted decisions. This is illustrated daily by the prominence of those who come here to testify against the plan. They are outstanding Americans, renowned for their intellect, courage and patriotism."

"On the other hand," Wheeler continued, "the Attorney General realizes that he can summon no such army of public-spirited citizens to defend the proposed bill. He must rely upon office-holders, paid public servants and some lawyers, who obviously hope to be struck by judicial lightning in the event that this measure is adopted.

Importance of Question.

"Hundreds of American citizens, holding responsible positions at the bar, in universities and in the moulding of public opinion, have asked to be heard. Obviously, we

EX-CONGRESSMAN HOEPPEL PAROLED FROM WORKHOUSE

District of Columbia Board Also Votes Unanimously Not to Free His Son.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, April 3.—The District of Columbia Parole Board, on a 2-to-1 vote, granted a parole from Occoquan Workhouse today to former Representative John H. Hoeppel of California, but refused unanimously to free his son, Charles J. Hoeppel.

They are serving four months to a year for conspiring to sell a West Point appointment for $1000. They become eligible for parole March 25 on expiration of their minimum sentence.

"The son," the majority opinion said, "was lacking in frankness and attempted to take refuge in technicalities and in shadowy distinctions. His story, far from convincing the board of his innocence, indicates that he was probably more culpable than his father, who did not originate the scheme and whose participation in it was less direct."

Dr. Emmett J. Scott, Negro member of the board, voted to deny liberty to both Hoeppels, saying "the public interest demands denial of parole."

SIT-DOWN STRIKERS LEAVE HERSHEY CHOCOLATE PLANT

March Out After Company Agrees to Negotiate, But Picket Building.

By the Associated Press.

HERSHEY, Pa., April 3.—One thousand sit-down strikers who had held the Hershey Chocolate Corporation plant since last Friday, marched from the building tonight under an agreement with the company to negotiate the termination of the strike. Picket lines were immediately formed outside the plant.

The company, of which W. F. R. Murrie is president, declared it had not violated the agreement it signed with the CIO union March 17.

The union demands a closed shop; equal division of the time and overtime through all shifts; reinstatement of union representatives, including among those laid off recently; seniority rights.

Murrie said between 75 and 100 had been laid off, a seasonal move each year. He added that many were married women and that he had informed the union it could choose new representatives if any old ones were laid off.

The examination will be made in the infirmary of Fresnes Prison, where Mme. la Ferriere is being treated for a cold.

NO MAJOR ACTS BY LEGISLATURE IN 12 WEEKS

Action Has Not Been Completed on Any Outstanding Measure of Statewide Importance.

MONTH AND HALF MORE OF SESSION

Only Pay, Job and Political Bills Passed — Good Roads and Autos Cut Time Given to Work.

By CURTIS A. BETTS,
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, April 3.—The Missouri Legislature is entering the thirteenth week of its session without having completed action on any outstanding piece of legislation of State-wide importance. Present estimates are that at least six more weeks will be required to conclude the session, May 15 being the earliest date now figured for final adjournment.

The assignable reason for the slow progress is that most of the time of the legislators, when in session, has been devoted to petty bills to provide additional political jobs, higher salaries for political job-holders and to advance the interests of private businesses or professions of many of the legislators.

Six of the 31 bills which have been passed by both houses and have either been signed by the Governor or are ready for his signature, increase salaries of county officers and justices of the peace and their clerks. There are bills of merit among the others, remedying slight defects in the law, but none can be considered an outstanding bill.

Bills in Formative Stage.

There has been no decision by the Legislature on such subjects as unemployment compensation, correction of the old age pension law, what shall be done about child labor or teachers' pensions, permanent registration for St. Louis and Kansas City, a drivers' license requirement to reduce accidents on the highways, the sales tax, the proposed State cancer hospital, the proposed increase in the gasoline tax, or needed legislation to put immediately into full effect the conservation commission amendment to the Constitution.

While it cannot be said that no progress has been made on most of these matters, the Legislature has got down to serious work on few of them. Committee hearings have been held, some of the bills have been reported out of the committees, a few have been perfected, but not one has got beyond the purely formative stage of legislation.

Jobless Compensation.

The unemployment compensation bill has been perfected in the House, but is still under consideration in the Senate Social Security Committee. The resolution for ratification of the Child Labor Amendment to the Federal Constitution has been reported out of the committee in the House, while a bill for a State law as a substitute for ratification has passed the Senate. The 2-cent sales tax bill has been passed by the House and is in committee in the Senate. The 3-cent gasoline tax bill has been perfected in the House.

The drivers' license bill shows no signs of life, and permanent registration is being blocked by the practical politicians, who have found the present registration fully satisfactory to them in their manipulations of elections.

Consideration of the larger subjects of Government quite naturally and properly consumes much more time than the little jobs bills and unimportant matters, but there is no doubt that, if all the legislators had given their full time to their legislative duties, all of the work would have been completed before this time, and the Legislature would have adjourned.

The most puzzling subject is that of unemployment compensation. There is little experience to guide in framing a bill, and there is an honest difference of opinion as to whether the Missouri law should provide for the employers' reserve plan or the pooled fund plan. Employers want the former and labor wants the latter. While the House has approved the employers' reserve plan, the Senate committee is still considering the bill. Whatever report the Senate committee makes, the issue will be fought out on the floor of the Senate, and, if the Senate should support labor in

FORD SIT-DOWN STRIKE SETTLED AT KANSAS CITY

Workers Evacuate Plant After 24 Hours; 'Will Return to Work Without Discrimination.'

FORCE REDUCTION CAUSED PROTEST

Seniority to Be Observed; Wage Parley at Detroit; 'Stay-in' Due to General 'Misunderstanding.'

By the Associated Press.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 3.—Ed Hall, second vice-president of the United Automobile Workers of America, announced settlement tonight of the strike which closed the Ford Motor Co.'s assembly plant here yesterday. Hall said the strikers would return to work Monday "without any discrimination whatsoever."

Following a conference with Ford officials tonight, Hall said recognition of the United Automobile Workers of America was not discussed because "recognition was not an issue."

The strikers sat down in the plant yesterday in protest against layoff of about 300 men, some of whom said they had worked for the company as long as 24 years. They evacuated the plant late today when conferences began, but picketed the plant while these continued. The lay-off was to cut production, it was stated.

Hall said wages were discussed at tonight's meeting and "the committee was advised that it was necessary to take up the discussion of wages in Detroit . . . that will be done." He said wage discussions would begin in Detroit upon his return there.

On Seniority Rules.

Discussing the "discrimination" provision of the agreement Hall said the union would not object to seasonal layoffs of employes as long as seniority rules were strictly observed. Whether any workers would be laid off Monday was not stated.

Hall, in a statement, said: "Settlement has been reached in the controversy, satisfactory to both parties." The statement concluded: "We feel that the sit-down was caused through a general misunderstanding between employes and management."

The strike agreement came after three hours of secret negotiations by Hall, an 18-man committee from the union here and unnamed representatives of the Ford Motor Co. Hall flew here today from Detroit on the same plane with the Ford representatives.

H. C. Doss, manager of the Ford plant here, issued a statement which he said confirmed Hall's announcement. In the form of a notice to employes, it said: "For the information of all our employes, we will operate Monday as usual."

Before returning to Detroit, Hall said he would stop at Anderson, Ind., to lead employe conferences at the Delco-Remy plant, a General Motors subsidiary. "We're going to get some little girls some more money," he said. He added that the United Automobile Workers now have a total membership of 326,000 and predicted "we will have the largest international in the world" at the end of another 30 days.

Exodus Led by a Band.

When the strikers marched, three abreast, from the factory, late today, their cheers rose above the blaring band which led the exodus. Police estimated there were 650 to 750 men in the sit-down execution. Normally, about 2200 men are employed. Hands on one another's shoulders, the strikers marched from the plant into an applauding crowd. Most of the workers had bedrolls under their arms.

The union at the Ford factory obtained its charter as Local No. 149 of the United Automobile Workers of America two weeks ago. It was not until after the strike started that the local elected officers. The 18-man executive committee is composed of three men from each of six departments in the plant.

Conduct of Strike.

The organization of the strike was swift. Wives, sweethearts, children and friends arrived in a steady stream carrying food, musical instruments and bedding. Even a game of table tennis was set up inside. Schedules were established for "furloughs" for eating and smoking. With a ladder to scale the surrounding 10-foot fence, strikers were permitted by their leaders to leave in the morning in groups of 50 for three hours. As the men returned others were allowed to leave "to go home and clean up."

During last night the strikers welded shut five gates to railroad

H. J. KATTELMAN WILL SERVE TERM IN LEAVENWORTH

This Is Contrary to His Plea Not to Be Sent to Prison That Holds Men He Helped Convict.

HIS PART IN PUTTING GANG BEHIND BARS

Got Federal Reward for Aiding Prosecution in $260,000 Mail Truck Robbery in 1923.

The five-year sentence of Harold J. Kattelman, bankrupt installment plan dealer in stocks, imposed Friday when he pleaded guilty of mail fraud, perjury and violation of the Securities Exchange Act, will be served at Leavenworth penitentiary, it was said yesterday at the office of the Department of Justice in Washington.

The designation of that prison runs counter to Kattelman's plea that he be not sent to one in which wrong-doers he helped the Government to convict are held, as three Egan gangsters, Steve Ryan, Oliver Dougherty, and Louis (Red) Smith are present inmates of that penitentiary.

Kattelman's part in putting them there is not generally known, but was recalled yesterday by one familiar with the inside story of how the Government built up the case which convicted Egan and Cuckoo gangsters of the $260,000 downtown mail truck robbery of April 2, 1923.

Kattelman Got Reward.

It was Kattelman, then a securities salesman in the Central National Bank Building, who gave Postoffice inspectors the tip which led them to arrest John H. Niedringhaus, a stock and bond salesman, who had been engaged by the gang to help dispose of the loot.

Kattelman had no conspicuous part in the subsequent trials and convictions, but, it was learned, collected a substantial reward from a confidential fund from which the Postoffice Department pays rewards and for which it makes no public accounting. The reward was paid in cash, because Kattelman feared gang vengeance, the Post-Dispatch was informed.

Soon after the robbery, the Post-Dispatch informant said, an effort was made to sell some of the bonds to Kattelman. A list of the bonds offered aroused Kattelman's suspicions, but he pretended to be interested, meanwhile communicating his suspicions to Postoffice Inspectors.

Most of Loot Recovered.

As a result of the information received from Kattelman, and from Niedringhaus, who became a Government witness and was not prosecuted, most of the bonds stolen in the robbery were recovered at the home of Whitey Doering, Egan gangster who was murdered after his conviction. Dinty Colbeck, leader of the gang, and seven others were subsequently convicted of possession and concealment of the bonds. All were sentenced to 15 years in prison.

These terms for Colbeck, Ryan, Dougherty, Smith, and Dave (Chippy) Robinson, were served concurrently with 25-year terms for a previous mail robbery which they are still serving. Colbeck and Robinson are at the Atlanta penitentiary.

Leo Cronin and Roy Tipton, Cuckoo gangsters who got 15-year sentences for the mail truck robbery, have completed their terms and been released. Another Cuckoo, Rudolph (Featheredge) Schmidt, became insane when serving his 15-year term and is in a Government hospital for the delinquent insane at Springfield, Mo.

His Choice of Prison.

No direct reference to the mail robbery case was made Friday when Kattelman entered his plea of guilty, but District Attorney Harry C. Blanton told United States District Judge Charles B. Davis Kattelman had requested that he be sent to some prison other than one which housed persons whom he had helped the Government to convict, and Kattelman's attorney, Patrick H. Cullen, told the Court Kattelman had assisted the Postoffice Inspectors and Department of Justice agents in convicting "a large number of wrong-doers." Judge Davis left to the Department of Justice the determination of the prison to which Kattelman should be sent.

How He Got Back License.

Kattelman's services to the Government in the mail robbery case stood him in good stead on an-

STUDENTS MAKE BOMB, ONE KILLED TESTING IT

Second Youth Gravely Hurt at Illinois U.; He Is From Highland.

By the Associated Press.

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., April 3. — A home-made bomb with which two University of Illinois freshmen were experimenting exploded in a tree tonight, killing one of the students and gravely injuring the other.

The dead youth was David O'Donnell, 18 years old, a chemistry student, and son of Thomas E. O'Donnell of Urbana, Ill., University of Illinois professor of architecture.

The injured youth was Rodger Shields, 18, mechanical engineering student, and son of aMr. and Mrs. Vernon W. Shields of Highland, Ill. Attending doctors said Shields had a chance to recover if infection did not set in.

Witnesses to the explosion said the boys had placed the bomb in the crotch of a tree on the edge of Champaign and were climbing down when it exploded prematurely. They had planned to back away from it and set it off by firing a pistol at it.

For some time, friends of the youths said, the two students had mixed university laboratory chemicals into bombs and had set them off around Urbana. Recently townspeople objected to the noise made by the explosions and asked them to fire them out of town.

Tonight O'Donnell and Shields notified some of their friends they were going to experiment with one of the bombs and asked them to watch their performance.

Accordingly, a small crowd gathered about two and one-half blocks from the spot where the explosive was placed. They watched the boys pedal bicycles out to the tree, climb into the tree, adjust the bomb and then start back to the ground.

Suddenly, the witnesses said, there was an explosion and then cries for help. The students rushed to the scene and found O'Donnell dead. Shields was conscious and in severe pain. He was taken to a hospital. His parents were notified and will arrive here early tomorrow morning. University officials said the experiments were made without their approval.

Yagoda Accused of 'Criminal Activity' as Posts and Telegraph Director.

By the Associated Press.

MOSCOW, April 4. (Sunday) — Dismissal of Genrikh Yagoda from the Commissariat of Posts and Telegraphs "because of criminal activity" was announced early today. Yagoda formerly was head of the G. P. U. (secret police.)

Informed sources interpreted the dismissal as making certain that Yagoda would face trial soon. He was transferred last September fro mthe Post of Commissar of Internal Affairs, which carried control of the secret police, to the relatively unimportant Commissariat of Posts and Telegraphs. His dismissal from the latter post has been expected by informed sources.

The official announcement, issued at 2 a. m. today said simply Yagoda "has been dismissed from the Commissariat of Posts and Telegraphs because of criminal activity in that post."

CORAL GABLES, Fla., April 3.—The State Bar Association voted a 124-to-37 disapproval of the Supreme Court scheme today after hearing Frederick H. Stinchfield, president of the American Bar Association, criticise the Roosevelt proposal.

Frank O. Sain, of Miami, only speaker against passage of the resolution, charged the Supreme Court had assumed legislative power.

Stinchfield predicted an all-powerful central government would result if President Roosevelt's bill were enacted.

LOYALISTS HAVE GAINED 15 MILES IN CORDOBA AREA

Insurgent Force, Burning Bridges in Flight, Said to Contain Many Italians—2 1-2 Mile Advance by Miaja Near Madrid.

STIFF FIGHTING IN BASQUE COUNTRY

Government Army Struggling to Hold Fascists From Bilbao; Mountain Peak Taken; Warships Shell Towns.

By the Associated Press.

MADRID, April 3.—Insurgents tonight set fire to forests and blew up bridges to cover a perilous retreat in Cordoba province on the southern Spanish front. Apparently they are trying to escape a trap in the rich coal lands of the province. Annihilation or scattering of their force, reported in Government quarters to number 15,000 and to be made up mostly of Italians, is believed here to be probable if the Government maneuver succeeds.

The Cordoba reports indicate Government troops have reached the outskirts of Villaharta, Penarroya and Ovejo, strategic towns between Pozoblanco, in northern Cordoba, and the insurgent base of Cordoba City to the south. Capture of Villaharta would give the Government army control of the Cordoba highway and cut off the insurgent avenue of retreat. Earlier reports said Villaharta had been captured, but dispatches from Government headquarters at Andujar said its fall was "imminent."

The Insurgent army has retreated 15 miles or more in a southerly direction from Pozoblanco toward the highway and Cordoba. The trap laid by the Government, if successful, would bottle it up some 20 miles north of Cordoba, important supply base.

Advance North of Madrid.

Government troops are pressing another advantage on the Aravaca front, just northwest of Madrid, having advanced more than a mile into territory held vital to the defense of the Capital. Insurgent dead is set at 300.

In two days, troops of Gen. Jose Miaja, Government commander in Central Spain, have swept forward two and a half miles in this sector, dominating the highway to Coruna, long closed to Government traffic because of nearby Insurgent positions.

The Aravaca advance is regarded as of great strategic importance since, if successful, it would turn the Insurgents' flank and affect their positions in Casa Del Campo, and in University City, Madrid suburbs, where they have held out for months.

Government infantry, led by tanks and grenade throwers, attacked the Insurgents' Aravaca positions after a long artillery bombardment. The offensive followed a series of advances in the Escorial area on the same front. Pushing into Avila province, the Government forces continued shelling Navalperal de Pinares in an effort to open a way to the City of Avila.

Government officers said observations showed the insurgents had begun to evacuate Aravaca. Twenty machine guns and large quantities of ammunition and gas masks have been captured in the advance.

Jadaraque, an important town on the Guadalajara front, northeast of Madrid, was shelled today by Government artillery. Government planes bombed the enemy at Almadrones, on the same front.

(Insurgent reports today said an attack on their positions northwest of Madrid had failed, and that Government soldiers left 20 dead on the field when they were beaten back).

Documents on Italian Forces.

Gen. Miaja said today that copies of more than 2000 documents captured on the Guadalajara front would be sent to London, Paris and

CIVILIANS EVACUATE TOWN OF DURANGO

Wholesale Exodus From Spanish City After Airmen Raid It Three Times in Day.

By the Associated Press.

MADRID, April 3.—The civil population of Durango began wholesale evacuation tonight after a day in which insurgent airplanes thrice bombed the already sorely stricken town, taking many lives.

A Febus (Spanish Government) news agency dispatch from Bilbao, the Basque capital, reported the authorities of Durango had ordered the evacuation and that by nightfall caravans of automobiles, carts and donkeys were on the road to Bilbao, 16 miles to the northwest.

Three times today insurgent trimotor bombers droned over Durango, where more than 200 were killed and 600 wounded in air bombardments Wednesday. Many bombs were dropped today, adding greatly to the destruction and claiming many more lives, although no accurate count was available.

Air Attack on Asylum.

Government reports said tonight that insurgent airplanes had dropped eight bombs on an asylum containing 1500 mentally deficient patients which stands in no man's land at Santa Aguedo, 10 miles southeast of Durango and near Orchandiano, and had turned their machine guns on attendants grouped in the patio.

Basque authorities said they would appeal to the International Red Cross to aid the victims. Incendiary as well as explosive bombs were used at Santa Agueda, said Government reports, and several buildings were set afire.

According to reports published in Bilbao, a blood transfusion hospital, plainly marked with a red cross, was among the buildings bombed at Santa Agueda. Two nuns were killed there and the hospital was badly damaged.

Basque reports also accused the insurgent air raiders of swooping low and turning their machine guns on refugees of all ages and sexes fleeing from Santa Agueda.

Lines Still Holding.

President Juan Antonio Aguirre of the Basque regime, which Gen. Francisco Franco's insurgents are trying to wipe out, announced the lines defending Bilbao still were holding, although the enemy had devoted all of another day—third of the offensive—to attempts to smash their way through, using tanks, armored cars and airplanes.

The President said the insurgents had failed to make any important gains in three days.

Basque military reports tonight asserted there were signs of the Insurgent drive slowing down. They said a whole Insurgent column was wiped out Friday while attempting to advance on Aramayona, on the road from Villarreal to Bilbao. Several Insurgent armored cars were destroyed.

The Febus Agency said Government troops made progress in their drive toward Burgos, first capital of the insurgent regime, in the area just west of the fight for Bilbao. A Government column, moving southward on the road from Santander, was reported to have stormed and taken new enemy positions in the vicinity of Sargentes, more than halfway from Santander to Burgos.

BASQUE DEFENDERS IN HEAVY FIGHTING

By the Associated Press.

WITH MILITARY OBSERVERS ON THE BILBAO FRONT, Northern Spain, April 3.—By the sea and in the tall mountains of the Basque lands, a Basque Government army is struggling tonight to hold Gen. Francisco Franco's insurgent armies from their autonomous capital, Bilbao. The insurgents made a surprise attack.

In their narrow strip along the Bay of Biscay, with insurgent country on the east and west and to the south, the Basques know the fall of their northern stronghold would be a blow to the Madrid-Valencia Government of Spain. The region is rich in natural resources, and, besides, it has access to the sea and help the sea can bring.

The fighting is hot both on the seacoast, some 21 miles east of Bilbao, and in the Cantabrian Mountains, which rim the Basque capital on the south and east. Both sides made halting progress today at separate points, with no important gain of ground for either.

Mountain and Sea Assaults.

On the sea, Government defenders withstood an assault on the town of Lequeitio 21 miles east and slightly north of Bilbao. On the south, in the mist-shrouded mountains, a band of Government Basques scaled a 4600-foot mountain peak, La Cruz, one of the natural barriers that lie between the insurgents and Durango, from which place they might sweep downhill some 16 miles into Bilbao.

BARON de LOUIS (right)

CHAIRMAN of the executive committee of the Kansas City Automobile Workers' Union, shown talking to L. E. GIMPLINE, strike committee member, just before the Ford plant there was evacuated by sit-down strikers late yesterday.

Some insurgent war materials on the mountain peak fell into Government hands, and the stiff battle there left insurgent dead strewn in the lofty crevices.

On other salients in the mountains, however, the insurgents edged ahead. The folk in the mountain village of Ochandiano, some 10 miles south and east of Durango, evacuated before them. The Basque army, said insurgent commanders, was being badly riddled, despite reinforcements. Armored cars bucked the Government lines, with varying successes.

Coast Towns Battered.

Insurgent seapower battered the Government towns on the coast, trying to clear the way for Franco's soldiers. The battleship Espana, the cruiser Velasco and heavily-armed trawlers poured shells into the string of picturesque Government settlements in the Lequetitio area.

Government pilots bombed the Espana yesterday and reported one hit. Unconfirmed reports said the Spanish government freighter Ana Maria, flying the Union Jack and carrying 650 tons of arms and food for Santander, was stopped by Insurgent trawlers 45 miles south of Cape Finistere and forced to put into Insurgent Ferrol.

At Vitoria, on Bilbao's south, Franco's officers assembled 100 bombing planes and as many pursuit ships for an offensive against the Basque lines. The Basques, themselves, have but a few planes.

Long Siege of Oviedo.

On the western end of the Basque country, the Government has resumed its months' long siege of Oviedo with big guns and infantrymen. To the southeast of Bilboa, Insurgents contend they have shaken Government troops out of positions 30 miles north of Burgos, erstwhile Insurgent capitol.

Thirty Insurgent planes were driven off from Bilbao yesterday, after a machine gun attack on Durango. At the time of the latter raid, a British popular front committee was in the town, but none was hurt.

A general Basque mobilization order has rushed thousands of defenders into Government ranks, already amounting to 15,000 or 20,000 well-equipped men. Refugees from mountain villages have thronged into Bilboa—some reports say there are 90,000 of them, creating a serious problem for Juan Antonio Aguirre's Basque government.

There have been reports of dissention both amongst the civil population of Bilbao and in the ranks of Franco's northern armies.

The agreement grants the companies the use of ports in Portugal, the Madeira Islands and the Azores.

Smoking was not allowed in the plant. The company's rule against alcoholic drinks in the plant was preserved.

Ford Explanation.

At Detroit a Ford official said: "When the sit-down strikes began in the automobile industry, Mr. Ford did not step up production and ordered it held at the existing level. It was discovered a few days ago that the Kansas City plant was running 80 cars a day ahead of schedule and it was ordered reduced.

"That necessitated laying off 200 to 300 men temporarily, and apparently the men laid off thought they were being picked on. As a matter of fact, it was a normal layoff, done in a normal manner, in order to maintain our schedules as determined when the sit-down in other plants began.

"It was not Mr. Ford's intention to 'go to town' so to speak, because other manufacturers were caught with sit-downs, and therefore our schedule, which could easily be stepped up in any of our plants, was held steady."

In carrying out the lay-off schedule plant foremen yesterday started singling out men to be dropped and asking them to turn in their company badges. Members of the union executive committee quickly passed out an order for the men to keep their badges, refrain from punching the time clock and to stay inside the plant.

By the Associated Press.

KANSAS CITY, Kan., April 3.—Officials of the Meyer Sanitary Milk Co. and 83 striking employes were deadlocked today over a request of strikers for a closed shop. The strike, involved 33 truck drivers and 50 plant employes. It is the first recently in Kansas City, Kan.

CHRYSLER, LEWIS RENEW EFFORTS TO SETTLE STRIKE

Principal Question Is Extent of Bargaining Recognition of C I O Union — Another Session Today.

By the Associated Press.

DETROIT, Mich., April 3.—Walter P. Chrysler and John L. Lewis tonight renewed their efforts to settle the Chrysler strike. An agreement of striking automobile workers at Flint, Mich., opened the way for the return to work Monday of 15,000 employes of General Motors.

The principal question confronting the Chrysler conferees is the extent of bargaining recognition to be accorded United Automobile Workers. The union called the strike to enforce a demand for exclusive bargaining rights; corporation officials refused to consider this. Some sources have expressed the view that a middle ground would be found.

Today's conference lasted three hours, then was recessed until 10 a. m. tomorrow.

Homer Martin, president of the United Automobile Workers of America, said strike sentiment among the union's members was subsiding.

Gov. Frank Murphy said he hoped for a prompt settlement as the Chrysler peace conferences, which were interrupted last Tuesday, were resumed.

Non-Unionists Cheer Chrysler

Chrysler, chairman of the board of the corporation whose Detroit workers struck March 8, throwing 60,000 men in eight plants out of employment, was the first to return to the Governor's conferences at Lansing, Mich.

He walked into the State Capitol amid the applause and shouts of about 100 non-union employes. The group, in a double file lining both sides of the walk, called out, "We want to go back to work" and "settle the strike today," as Chrysler and other corporation executives entered.

Lewis rejoined Martin and other union officials in time for the day's second conference. As head of the Committee for Industrial Organization, parent body of the United Automobile Workers, he is directing the automobile strikes.

Extent of Strikes.

Before the agreement for the reopening of the Chevrolet Motor Co. plants at Flint, scene of a sit-down strike Thursday, the number of temporary idle in the automobile industry had reached 137,000, comparable to the highest point of the nation-wide General Motors shutdowns in January and February.

Agreements already reached provided for the return of 15,000 employes of General Motors units at Pontiac, Mich., including Fisher Body, Pontiac Motor Co. and Yellow Truck and Coach Manufacturing Co., Sunday and Monday. Expected to reopen shortly after the Chevrolet plants are a Fisher Body plant at Flint, employing 1100, and Chevrolet foundry and parts units employing 7400 at Saginaw, the production schedules of which were disrupted by the Flint shut-down.

Others idle because of the strikes included more than 10,000 Hudson Motor Car Co. employes at Detroit, 2200 workers in the Ford Kansas City plant and an equal number in the Reo Motor Co. truck factory at Lansing, and nearly 20,000 Briggs Body employes awaiting resumption of Chrysler production lines.

Wage Adjustment at Flint.

Robert C. Travis, union organizer whose conference at Flint with Arnold Lenz, Chevrolet operations manager, resulted in the decision to reopen the plant, said a general wage adjustment effective Monday was agreed on and that Lenz would discuss a union complaint that certain parts of the assembly line were undermanned.

Difficulties attendant on the institution of a shop steward system under the March 12 agreement that ended the long General Motors strikes will be discussed by Martin and company officials in a conference Sunday morning.

The work interruptions at Flint and Pontiac, which union leaders described as spontaneous and unauthorized by international officers, brought a demand from General Motors yesterday that the union live up to pledges against such occurrences.

Martin said today: "Our members are beginning to realize that this kind of procedure (unauthorized strikes) is not only harmful to the corporaton but also is detrimental to their own organization."

He added, however, "It has been quite obvious from the beginning that certain plant managers and even high officials of General Motors accepted the agreement with their fingers crossed, so to speak, with an idea of evading real collective bargaining if they could do so."

Hudson Dispute.

After the Hudson Motor Co. in a letter to employes today stated that the union had "refused to bargain further" after a demand for sole bargaining rights was refused, T. M. Doll, president of the Hudson local, charged the company "misrepresents the situation."

"Negotiations were concluded," Doll said, "because the management was not negotiating at all. All its representatives would do in the conferences was to threaten to go out of business before granting any union demands."

The Hudson letter, signed by I. B. Swegles, vice-president in charge of manufacturing, repeated "the company's long standing practice of bargaining with its employes either individually or with any group collectively," and added: "It still offers you work at the highest hourly wages in its history."

Doll in a statement asserted Hudson wages "are anywhere from 10 to 15 cents an hour less than the average in the industry."

G. R. Harris, superintendent of the Detroit Welfare Department, placed the city's case load today at 16,483, which he said was 1500 greater than the seasonal expectation. He attributed the increase to strikes, the largest of which was the Chrysler dispute.

2800 MEN FIGHTING 40 FIRES IN WEST VIRGINIA FORESTS

Thirty-five Other Blazes Are Under Control; Six Suspected Incendiarists Held.

By the Associated Press.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., April 3.—A corps of 2800 men, many of them C C C workers, fought more than 40 forest and slashings fires in West Virginia tonight.

D. B. Griffin, State Forester, said 35 other fires were under control, but continued to burn. He also said six suspected incendiarists have been arrested in Mingo and McDowell counties, on the Kentucky border, and that other arrests are expected.

Griffin described conditions as "very acute," but added, "we may be able to get the fires under control soon if no brisk wind develops."

Hardest hit were the counties of McDowell, Kanawha, Mingo and Boone, all south of the Kanawha River.

Fire licked toward the famous white oak in Boone County, which the Conservation Commission claims is the largest white oak in the United States.

"Of seven fires burning in Kanawha County, one was almost in sight of the capital.

"The woods are like tinder," Griffin declared. "We had only 1.18 inches of rainfall in March and for five days this week the sun has shone and there have been fair breezes."

C I O SAYS 46 STEEL FIRMS RECOGNIZE LEWIS UNION

Announce Negotiations With 18 Others; Rejects Refusal of Written Contract by One Employer.

By the Associated Press.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., April 3.—Steel union forces of John L. Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization asserted today they had recognition from 46 steel companies in the United States and were negotiating for collective bargaining contracts with 18 additional producers. They said more than 40,000 steelworkers were employed by the companies now negotiating with union representatives.

Regional Director Clinton S. Golden made public a letter in which he said the committee would not accept the refusal of Lorenz Iverson, president of Mesta Machine Co., to enter into a written contract. Iverson, head of one of the world's largest manufacturers of steel mill equipment, said he would receive written requests from union workers and post his answers on bulletin boards in the company's plants at Homestead, Pa.

SOVIET WORKERS ORDERED TO INCREASE THEIR OUTPUT

Government Announces They Must Step Up Production 20 Per Cent or Take Pay Cut.

By the Associated Press.

MOSCOW, April 3.—The Commissariat of Heavy Industry today ordered the Russian piece worker to increase his output this year by 20 per cent or take a pay cut.

The order placed on the piece-worker part of the responsibility for stimulating lagging industrial production. Tuesday the Government called on all industry to increase production by 20 per cent over that of 1936, lest the second five-year plan fall short.

The decision to increase production norms, the amount required of each worker, was the second such move within eight months.

The norm has been fixed on the average daily output of the average worker. Piece-workers who were able to exceed that mark greatly were rewarded handsomely with bonuses.

COPPER NOT TOO HIGH, WHEELER DECLARES

Takes Issue With President That Prices of Durable Goods Are Excessive.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, April 3.—Senator Wheeler (Dem.), Montana, taking issue with President Roosevelt's contention that the price of copper is too high, said today the proposed curtailment of Government purchases would throw miners out of work.

The President said that prices of cents a pound companies in Butte copper, were too high. He enunciated a new policy intended to increase purchasing power for consumers' goods and discourage Government buying of durable products.

Wheeler, whose State is one of the principal producers of copper, contended it would be impossible for American miners "to have a half-way decent standard of living" if the price were reduced "by any appreciable extent."

(The market price recently has been about 17 cents.)

"I am sure the President is wrong when he states that mines in Montana can produce copper at 8 or 9 cents and make a profit and that mines in other parts of the country can make money on 5 or 6 cent copper," Wheeler said. "I am sure the mines in Montana cannot make any money and pay present wages on 8 or 9 cent copper. They have a wage scale in Butte now, I am told, of $6 a day for ordinary miners. The wages go up or down automatically with the price of copper pursuant to the contract the companies have with the miners. When copper sold around 8 or 9 cents a pound companies in Butte had to curtail production. . . . No copper mines in the United States can produce copper for anything like 5 or 6 cents a pound now. Very few of them can produce and pay the present wages on 9 or 10 cent copper. Independent mining companies in Butte tell me they have to get at least 14 cents in order to pay the present wage scale."

Wheeler said "Africa with its slave labor is today the big competitor of American copper," and added "I know of no one in America who wants to see American miners placed in a position where they have got to compete with either the slave labor of Africa or that of the peons of Mexico."

Wheeler's colleague, Senator Murray, declined to join in the criticism, saying "no intelligent opinion could be formed without knowing production costs."

"The big corporations' system of bookkeeping is such that the general public can't know what the costs are and it isn't supposed to know," he added.

CUMMINGS TRYING TO END HEARINGS, WHEELER CHARGES

cannot hear all of them, but it is the duty of the Senate Judiciary Committee to continue these public hearings until every cross-section of public opinion has been given an opportunity to present its views.

"This bill is not an inconsequential matter. Fundamentally, it changes our form of government. No single question before Congress has its portent or its potential effect upon future generations. It is the duty of Congress and its committee to consider it deliberately and dispassionately, independent of extraneous influences."

Ashurst Forecasts 10 Votes.

Ashurst denied specific knowledge of the line-up within his committee after the four weeks of hearings, but forecast that the bill "will have 10 votes when the test comes." He added that was "a mere guess." Ten votes for the bill would give it a favorable report by a margin of 10 to 8.

Asked if he meant that would be the vote on the bill as it stands, Ashurst replied he had "no interest in the measure if they go to cutting it to pieces."

The committee chairman discounted the talk of court bill opponents that action on a constitutional amendment could be speeded by having Congress call the state conventions to ratify it.

"It would take all summer to get anything through Congress," Ashurst said, "and the states would indignantly resent that and justly. We can't force them to hold conventions."

On the House side of the capitol Representative Cannon (Dem.), Wisconsin, drafted a request to the House to call on the Senate to end hearings and bring the court legislation to a vote. He said important legislation is being impeded unnecessarily.

"The lengthy debate, and competitive radio speeches," the Cannon resolution said, "have degenerated into personal attacks, unseemly vituperations, and mere contests of words."

GRAZIANI'S ATTACKERS 'CAME FROM LONDON'

Semi-Official Italian Paper Refers to Sons of Ethiopian Minister, Who Were Killed.

By the Associated Press.

ROME, April 3.—Azione Coloniale, a semi-official Italian colonial publication, said in an article reproduced in newspapers here today that two Ethiopians chiefly responsible for an attempt to kill Viceroy Rodolfo Graziani in Addis Ababa last Feb. 19, came "straight from London."

Colonial sources said the publication referred to two sons of Dr. Warqneh C. Martin, Ethiopian Minister to London, who still holds that post despite Italy's conquest of Ethiopia.

(The Ethiopian legation in London has declared the two—Joseph and Benjamin Martin—were killed in a "massacre" of Ethiopians by the Italians in reprisal for the attempt to kill Graziani. Today the legation said it had learned Theodore, a third son of the Minister, also had been killed).

"The two persons principally responsible," Azione Coloniale said, "left the British capital at the beginning of February. On their arrival from London, the two culprits made the act of solemn submission (to the Italian authorities) Feb. 18. On Feb. 19 bombs were thrown (at Graziani). They were sons of a former functionary of the Negus, still in contact with him." (The Negus, Haile Selassie, is living in England).

"Only in persons living in a foreign country and in surroundings such of those from which the culprits came could the idea and illusion of any success for such an attempt have been born."

Graziani has recovered from his wounds.

WAY CLEAR TO BUILD TRENTON CITY PLANT

Federal Judge Otis Dismisses Utility's Petition for Permanent Injunction.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 3.—A petition for a permanent injunction to prevent the city of Trenton, Mo., from constructing a municipal power plant with Federal aid in competition with the present light and power plant owned by the Missouri Public Service Co. was dismissed today by United States District Judge Merrill E. Otis.

In dismissing the petition he also dissolved a temporary injunction which he had granted Jan. 18, last, on application of the company to prevent the city, Fairbanks Morse & Co., of Chicago, and others from fulfilling contracts for the $315,000 plant. At that time he upheld the contention of the company that the city had not complied with Missouri statutes in calling for bids on the project, but stated the injunction would hold pending a hearing on questions of fact.

In March, 1935, Judge Otis ruled against the company when it attacked the municipal project on the ground that the P W A loan and grant were unconstitutional. The Judge delivered a memorandum opinion holding that the proposed purchase by the United States of city bonds and the proposed grant to the city were within the power conferred upon administrative officials by the P W A section of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

The Judge held also that the P W A section, known as Title 2, is constitutional and that regardless of that question "the plaintiff has no standing in this case to question its constitutionality." He followed his own ruling in a similar case arising at California, Mo.

United States District Judge Albert L. Reeves also refused an injunction sought by the company in 1934. The matter has been in litigation in various courts since the plant was proposed in 1933.

By the Associated Press.

PANA, Ill., April 3.—About 200 miners employed by the Pana Coal Co. voted today to return to their jobs Monday after about half of them went on a brief sit-down strike and forced the pit to close down for the day.

Glenn A. Shafer, president of the company and secretary of the Coal Producers' Association of Illinois, announced the decision after a committee of the miners met with him, then went into a session of their own to determine whether they would work Monday.

REMMERS SEES 'PEANUT POLITICS' IN RELIEF CLAIMS

'Studied Falsehoods,' Declares Republican Mayoralty Candidate, of Democratic Statements.

'BLOW-UP TUESDAY FOR MAYOR'S CREW'

Any Threat of Reprisal After Election 'Simply Present Gang Whistling in Cemetery.'

The statements of Congressman John J. Cochran and other Democratic campaign speakers, urging re-election of Mayor Bernard F. Dickmann on the ground that a Democratic Mayor would be in a much better position to secure cooperation from the National Democratic administration on relief and other matters, were characterized as statements "worthy of peanut politicians trying to perpetuate their own gang in office," by Oliver T. Remmers, Republican nominee for Mayor, in a radio speech last night.

"Speakers, popping off for the present Mayor, are attempting to frighten certain people by saying a change of administration will affect Federal improvement and relief funds," said Remmers. "These statements are studied falsehoods. They are not based on facts and they libel the motives of the President. I am sure the President would repudiate any such suggestion.

"The President has repeatedly announced that relief is non-political. My many years' experience with high Federal officials has convince me that the present Mayor has not used proper methods to obtain our share of Federal funds. Had effective presentation been made at Washington, better results might have been obtained.

New York City's Portion.

"New York City, with its Republican Mayor, who knows how to go about it, has received more relief and improvement money per capita than any other city in the United States. The Mayor of New York went out and fought for the people. The present Mayor of St. Louis was so busy with his personal affairs and political squabbles that he did not have time nor inclination to look after the welfare or relief of workers in St. Louis.

"The present crowd in office has repeatedly said that they were going to clean up while the cleaning is good, as they knew their tenure in office was short. While they were busy with their various types of shake-downs, they have had no time to look after the needy.

"I pledge the citizens of St. Louis that I conceive it a duty to administer the city's affairs upon a non-partisan basis. I will, if elected, give hearty co-operation to national and State administrations in every humanitarian and utilitarian program."

Remmers urged every citizen qualified to vote, to vote at the election Tuesday, declaring that the Board of Election Commissioners had issued strict instructions to guard the secrecy of the ballot and any threat of reprisal by Democratic political workers for not voting Democratic was simply "the present gang whistling in the cemetery."

Riverfront Investigation.

He again charged that the Mayor's "lieutenants" had assisted in the movement to block investigation of the Jefferson memorial riverfront bond issue, and declared that the Democrats had brought about delay of the investigation to prevent a "blow-up" before Tuesday's election.

"The blow-up, because of atrocious conditions, will come next Tuesday," he declared. "The citizens will then have an opportunity to express their resentment against the gangsters, the gunmen and the ex-convicts and the rest of the crew on the ship of which the present Mayor is captain."

Remmers issued a statement yesterday, addressed to Republican election judges and clerks, urging them to insist on strict compliance with election laws at Tuesday's election.

John S. Leahy, lawyer, in a radio speech last night, urged the election of Remmers and the re-election of Comptroller Louis Nolte.

Mrs. Nan Macy Brill, Wed Six Days, Says 'Half of New York Society' Will Aid Her.

By the Associated Press.
SAN FRANCISCO, April 3.—Mrs. Nan Pierson Brooks Macy Brill, New York heiress, collapsed in a hotel today, and reviving, said she would "bring my ex-husband and half of New York society" to fight an annulment suit filed by her second husband, William Brill Jr.

She eloped March 29 to Yuma with Brill, who is also wealthy and socially prominent.

Their honeymoon lasted two days, then he disappeared, and she was informed Friday he had filed suit for annulment, charging they were intoxicated when the ceremony was performed, and that she had misrepresented her previous marital status.

Hysterical, she wheeled one of his large roadsters out of the four-car garage back of his home and sped 400 miles to San Francisco. She had no money or luggage.

Today, shortly after she arose, Mrs. Brill had another attack of hysteria. She burst into tears when she attempted to give a newspaper interview.

"When I saw him in the garage yesterday," she said, "he took me in his arms and told me he loved me and was coming to me. He didn't say why he left me.

"Then, 10 minutes later, one of the reporters told me he was asking for an annulment. He can't do that to me. I'll fight it.

"I never in my life have taken a drink of anything stronger than wine. My former husband, George Macy, can tell them so. And he would, too. And so would all my friends.

"I love Bill and I'm not going to let anyone take him away from me. I'm going to get George Macy and half of New York society to come here and testify to my character.

"I don't know what they think I am. I married Bill, legally. We were stone sober and there will be four witnesses for that. His mother and Bill and I discussed it all for two weeks before the ceremony. I'm a wife in more than name only and I'm going to keep my husband."

The heiress, when she divorced George Henry Macy at Reno, sued his mother, Mrs. Martha Law Macy Kerr, and his stepfather, Allan H. Kerr, for alienation of affections, asking for $150,000. It was later announced the divorce contained a settlement of $100,000.

6 ARRESTED FOR ANNOYING NON-UNION SIDEWALK LAYERS

Charged With Disturbance of Peace and Resisting Arrest; Patrolman Slightly Hurt.

Six men were arrested last evening after a labor disturbance in front of a building at 1620 North Jefferson avenue where four non-union Negro workmen were engaged in making a new concrete sidewalk.

Probationary Patrolman John Flynn, who was stationed there to protect the workmen, reported that the six men told the Negroes to quit work because they did not have union cards. Flynn told the six men to move on, he said, and they became abusive. He sought to place them under arrest and a scuffle epsued. A call was made for police reinforcements. Detective-Sergeant William Forthman and two detectives found three of the men in a nearby saloon and had to subdue them because they resisted arrest, Forthman reported. Forthman suffered a broken right hand in striking one of them.

The men were booked on charges of disturbance of the peace and resisting arrest. They identified themselves as John Jones, 5532 Ridge avenue; Frank Stewart, 2624A St. Louis avenue; Theodore Schultz, 1827 North Market street; James Fitzgerald, 3209 Potomac street; Leon Munson, 2624A St. Louis avenue, and Michael Carr, 1615 Hogan street.

BURGLAR ADMITS 25 ROBBERIES AND TELLS OF CAREER

Otto Schomberg Broke in Homes Since Feb. 27—Began Stealing at 14, Has Served Five Terms.

LAST TIME DECIDED TO 'GO STRAIGHT'

Guarded Flood Goods, Didn't 'Take a Thing'—One House Full of Cops' Photos, He Got Out.

Otto Schomburg, who has been a burglar since he was 14 years old, and who has served five prison terms, was picked up by detectives yesterday at a cheap downtown hotel and readily confessed to robbing 25 homes here since Feb. 27.

Schomburg, who ran into the hotel when detectives started to question him after observing he wore a suit given discharged convicts at the penitentiary at Jefferson City, said he was released there Dec. 16 after serving 35 months of a five-year sentence for burglary. Searching him, Detective Sergeant Henry Klug and Detective John Asinger found four skeleton keys and a woman's diamond ring identified as part of loot taken from the home of Mrs. Elizabeth Brown, 3017 North Spring avenue, on March 6. Miscellaneous jewelry from other robberies was found in his room.

Decided to Go Straight.

The prisoner, a sallow man of 51 who talked freely to police and newspaper reporters, said that after leaving the penitentiary he had "determined to go straight." He related proudly that after losing a job at a fish market at Paducah, Ky., during the flood, he got another guarding a man's household goods and possessions and "didn't take a thing."

But when the river subsided he lost that job, he said, and when he couldn't find work in St. Louis turned burglar again. He said he watched homes until he was sure the families were away and then entered with a skeleton key or through a rear window.

"Surprising how many windows you find unlocked," Schomburg observed, "householders ought to be more careful. And door chains would be a big help too."

Photos of Cops All Around.

The former convict, who ruefully observed he knew what was in store for him, related that he succeeded in entering one house only to find photographs of uniformed policemen all around.

"I figured a whole family of cops lived there and I got out quickly without taking anything," he observed. He didn't get much in most of his robberies, the largest being $50 and about $250 worth of jewelry obtained at Mrs. Brown's home.

Schomburg's last penitentiary sentence resulted from his arrest here in 1932 as he was breaking into a home on South Kingshighway. Loot from other robberies was found in his room. At 14, he was sent to an Illinois reformatory and he has served sentences for burglary in prisons there and at San Quentin, Cal. He also served eight years of a 15-year penitentiary term for shooting to death James Arnold, an East St. Louis policeman.

NO MAJOR ACTS BY LEGISLATURE IN 12 WEEKS

its demand for the pooled fund, final decision will have to be worked out in a conference committee of the two houses.

Sessions Longer and Longer.

Within the past few years legislative sessions have gradually lengthened. Twenty years ago adjournment almost invariably came before April 1, the session rarely continuing more than 75 or 80 days. Each session the time has increased a little until, two years ago, the session lasted 147 days. This year it will be nearly that long.

The cause of longer sessions generally is attributed to good roads. When Jefferson City was reached only by railroad, it was difficult of access from many parts of the State. Most of the legislators came at the beginning of the session and remained in Jefferson City until the end, with possibly only one or two trips to their homes throughout the entire period.

Now almost any member can leave the Capitol at noon Friday by automobile and be home in from 30 minutes to five hours. He can look after his personal affairs Saturday, Sunday and Monday and drive back to Jefferson City Monday night or Tuesday morning.

The result is that there is a general exodus from Jefferson City Friday morning and never a full attendance before Tuesday. Consequently, real work is limited to Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of each week. There are legislative sessions Monday afternoons and Friday mornings, but the attendance is so small that the work then is limited to the small matters, controversial questions being postponed until the middle of the week.

This week no important work will be done before Wednesday, as municipal elections are to be held Tuesday in St. Louis and many of the smaller cities and towns, and many of the Legislators will stay home for the elections, not returning to the Capitol until Wednesday.

KIRKSVILLE, MO., MAYOR'S LEG AMPUTATED AFTER BOMBING

Gail A. Jacobs Condition Described as "Fair"; Little Progress Made in Inquiry.

By the Associated Press.
KIRKSVILLE, Mo., April 3. — Surgeons amputated Mayor Gail A. Jacobs' left leg tonight. The Mayor was injured seriously in the explosion at his home last Tuesday, and his left leg was broken in 15 places.

Physicians deemed amputation necessary after circulation became impaired and infection set in this afternoon. Dr. R. O. Stickler said Jacobs' condition after the operation was "fair."

The explosion was caused by a bomb wired to the Mayor's automobile. Little progress has been made in the investigation of the attempter assassination.

H. J. KATTELMAN WILL SERVE TERM IN LEAVENWORTH

other occasion, in 1934, when his license to do business was suspended by the State Securities Commissioner.

A letter in his behalf was written to the Securities Commissioner by A. D. Bunsen, a postoffice inspector, at the time of the mail truck robbery, and now a private detective. Bunsen stated that as a postoffice inspector he had transacted "official business of great importance" with Kattelman and found him "absolutely reliable."

Kattelman's license was restored a few weeks later, and it was said yesterday at the office of the Securities Commissioner that Bunsen's letter weighed heavily in the decision to restore it.

His firm, H. J. Kattelman Co., closed its doors about a year and a half later, however, in June, 1935, when the Securities and Exchange Commission filed an injunction suit alleging it was an insolvent bucket shop. Schedules filed since the firm was adjudged bankrupt showed that it owed $355,000 to more than 500 customers.

MILK AT 3 CENTS A QUART FOR TIME IN NEW YORK STORES

Price Cutting Follows Expiration of State Control; Cost Range Varies by Districts.

By the Associated Press.
NEW YORK, April 3.—Milk sold as low as three cents a quart in New York today as dealers tried to underbid each other, four days after expiration of the price control authority of the State Department of Agriculture.

Dealers said the three-cent price prevailed for a time in some stores on the lower East Side, but later rose to five. Otherwise, throughout the city, milk was sold at from 8 to 11 cents.

The Milk Control Commission predicted new low prices for Monday.

SHOOTS HIS FATHER AND BROTHER-IN-LAW

Clarence Patton Held; Admits Wounding Two After Quarrels at Brentwood.

Walter Warfield, 49-year-old paperhanger, and his father-in-law, Joseph Patton, 75, were shot and seriously wounded at 10:45 o'clock last night at the Warfield home, 8222 Manchester road, Brentwood. Police arrested Patton's son, Clarence, who they said admitted the shooting.

Police quoted Patton as saying the shooting was the result of a series of family arguments over the past several months.

The wounded men were taken to St. Louis County Hospital, where physicians said Warfield was wounded in the right jaw and Patton in the left arm.

Mrs. Warfield, daughter of the elder Patton, told police she and her husband were asleep in the front room of their bungalow when she was awakened by the shooting. She said she did not know what started the trouble.

Joseph Patton, asked by a Post-Dispatch reporter at the hospital as to the cause of the shooting, said, "I don't know why."

The Pattons resided with the Warfields, the father and son occupying a bedroom adjoining that of the Warfields. Clarence Patton, 40 years old, is a tobacco firm employe. His father formerly was employed by the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

Woodrow Wood, attendant at a filling station half a block west, told a reporter he ran to the scene after hearing Mrs. Warfield scream. He found her running about the yard in night-clothing, waving a small-caliber automatic pistol.

Wood said he took the pistol from her and entered the house, where he found the three men in underwear, the elder Patton lying across a bed.

FORMER GRANITE CITY MAN SHOT TO DEATH IN ARKANSAS

Body of Samuel Eads, 56, Found Back of His Beer Parlor Near Paragould.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.
PARAGOULD, Ark., April 3.—Samuel Eads, 56-year-old former resident of Granite City, Ill., was found shot to death yesterday back of a combination grocery and beer parlor on the Cache River, 15 miles north of here.

Coroner Ray Little said Eads, who was watching the place for the owner, who had been called away, apparently had been called to the door and shot from the outside, a shotgun charge having passed through a screen. The body was then dragged outside.

A Coroner's jury returned an open verdict and Sheriff's deputies began an investigation. Eads lived with a son-in-law, Fletcher Jackson, near the scene of the shooting.

Eads, a widower, lived in Granite City until about six years ago, and formerly was a stationary engineer at a Granite City steel plant. His daughter is the wife of Deputy Sheriff Fred Craycraft of Venice.

COL. GEORGE HARVEY'S DAUGHTER ENDS LIFE

Mrs. A. S. Cobb, Ill Four Years, Shoots Herself in New York.

By the Associated Press.
NEW YORK, April 3.—Mrs. Dorothy Harvey Cobb, daughter of the late Col. George Harvey, former United States Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, was found dead today from what a medical examiner said was a self-inflicted bullet wound.

Her body was found by her husband, Augustus S. Cobb, a vice-president of the Bankers Trust Co., when he went to her room in their hotel suite this morning, to see how she was feeling. She had been ill for about five years.

Assistant Medical Examiner Charles B. Cassassa listed the death as "suicide—despondency."

A pistol, which her husband said she had owned for 10 years, was found beside Mrs. Cobb's body. Cobb told police his wife was suffering from tuberculosis and said he knew no other reason that would have caused her to take her life.

Police said she left three notes, addressed without names, to her "husband," "brother-in-law" and "children," but refused to divulge the contents.

Mrs. Cobb, 41 years old, was socially prominent both here and abroad. She was previously married to Col. Marcellus H. Thompson, manufacturer of the Thompson machine gun. She married Cobb in February, 1929, three days after she and Thompson were divorced.

The Social Register listed Mrs. Cobb as having two daughters, one by each marriage. They are Miss Dorothy M. Thompson and Miss Jean Cobb.

SENATOR CLARK URGES VICTORY FOR DICKMANN

It Will Be Indorsement of Kind of Government Democrats Have Given Nation, He Says.

TELLS OF FEDERAL GRANTS MAYOR GOT

Declares Country Waits to See If St. Louis Will Indorse Party That Led It Out of Depression.

Victory for Mayor Bernard F. Dickmann in the election Tuesday will be a "vigorous indorsement of the kind of government the Democratic party has given the whole nation," United States Senator Bennett Champ Clark declared last night in a speech at a Democratic rally in the Twelfth Ward at St. Boniface's Church Hall, Michigan avenue and Schmirer street.

Dickmann, concluding a busy week o fcampaigning also spoke, summarizing his record in office, as he has in most of his previous speeches.

Clark said that "the nation is anticipating with interest and concern the result of the balloting in St. Louis on Tuesday."

"That result," he said, "will be regarded as a national portent.

"In two ways I have come to be familiar with the accomplishments of Mayor Dickmann," he continued. "I have been a witness to his good work in St. Louis and a close observer of his successful efforts in your behalf in Washington. I can tell you that there is no Governor of any state, and no mayor of any city, more highly respected in Washington than is your own chief executive of St. Louis.

Mentions Federal Grants.

"His standing is such that it has enabled him to procure for you Federal grants out of which you have been able to re-employ workers who have long been without employment or any means of self-support, and for permanent public improvements, which, as they continue to serve you, will also remain monuments to the energy and capacity of Barney Dickmann."

Clark complimented the Mayor on the campaign booklet reviewing his administration, on which Dickmann has based his campaign, declaring that "from beginning to end, this report is a story that recounts the finest product of a good head and a kind heart that I have read in many years."

"I therefore bespeak for him next Tuesday," said Clark, "a majority in his favor, so large that it will fittingly express your regard for him and adequately reward his services to you. I could ask this for his sake, but that would hardly be sufficient reason. I could ask it for the sake of the country, which is watching and waiting to see whether St. Louis will approve or condemn the party which has brought our nation out of the depths of depression and desolation. But I shall not urge you to accept him even for that reason. But I will and do ask that for your own sake, you re-elect next Tuesday, the man who has done vastly more than he promised and more than you even dared expect."

Mayor Talks of Savings.

Mayor Dickmann, again emphasizing the point that his administration had operated the city government at a cost of $9,000,000 less than the previous administration, reviewed in detail the savings as reported by each of the major city departments.

"So that you may realize the true significance of these sayings, I shall give you some idea of how far it would go if it were equally divided among the people of this city," he said. "It would permit an allowance of $10 to every man, woman and child in our total of 870,000 inhabitants. If we gave it to families, instead of to individuals, it would insure them a minimum of $50 apiece. I leave it to you to decide whether that kind of stewardship merits the approval we are asking at the polls next Tuesday."

Final Mass Meeting Today.

The final Democratic mass meeting will be held at 2 o'clock this afternoon in the convention hall of the Municipal Auditorium. Speakers will include the Mayor, Senator Clark, Congressmen John J. Cochran and Thomas C. Hennings Jr., Lawrence McDaniel, designated Excise Commissioner; Lawrence Boogher, the party nominee for Comptroller and Robert E. Hannegan, chairman of the Democratic City Committee.

The Polish Democratic Central Organization will meet at 1940 Cass avenue at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon and the Woodrow Wilson Democratic Club at the Greek Orthodox Church, 4955 Forest Park boulevard, at 8:30 this evening.

TRUCK STRIKE PARLEY AT WILMINGTON, DEL.

Mayor Says Operators Have Agreed to Enter Into Collective Bargaining.

By the Associated Press.

WILMINGTON, Del., April 3.—Mayor Walter W. Bacon announced tonight that truck operators had agreed to enter "collective bargaining" with representatives of the Central Labor Union within 48 hours to end the city's three-week truck strike.

A city-wide strike called by the Central Labor Union to enforce settlement of the strike, was called off today eight hours after it had started. Mayor Bacon, with Gov. Richard C. McMullen, went into conference with representatives of the Central Labor Union, over-the-road truck operators and the Employers' Policy Committee, representing the city operators.

The Mayor announced the agreement after the conference, and said that the truck strike would continue until negotiations were actually begun.

The Employers' Policy Committee asked that negotiations between the local operators and the Central Labor Union be separate from those with over-the-road operators. The committee asked also that a Wilmington unit of the Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs and Truck Drivers, be organized, rather than have the local drivers and helpers under the jurisdiction of the Philadelphia unit.

The Central Labor Union agreed to both requests. It announced that the Philadelphia unit would continue in jurisdiction of the over-the-road drivers.

The agreement tonight set aside a warning by James T. Houghton, secretary-treasurer of the Central Labor Union, that the union would call out all organized workers again if the conference failed.

Those who met with the Governor and the Mayor were Lieutenant-Colonel Louise H. Coxe III, of Washington, spokesman for the Policy Committee of the employers, Arthur Logan, counsel for the Employers' Policy Committee, Frank J. Pappa, president of the Central Labor Union, and Federal Mediator Edward C. MacDonald.

Brick throwing, window smashing and other sporadic disorder marked the start of the strike at 6 a. m. after eleventh-hour efforts by Gov. McMullen and Mayor Bacon failed to prevent the strike.

Windows in some central city buildings were broken. Bricks were hurled at several automobiles and trucks were overturned.

The union did not include milk and bakery wagon drivers in the general strike order and deliveries of these necessities continued. Trolley cars and busses ran.

AVERAGE BEGGAR'S EARNINGS $3.70 A DAY

Number Found Downtown Relatively Small, Says Survey by Bureau.

A detailed study of the habits and earnings of beggars on downtown streets indicates there is actually only a relatively small number, in spite of previous estimates that several hundred operated in St. Louis, according to a summary of the survey made public yesterday by Sidney Maestre, president of the board of directors of the Bureau for Homeless Men, 204A North Eighteenth street.

The most popular streets for begging are Olive and Locust from Broadway to Ninth, and Sixth and Seventh streets between Olive and Washington avenue, the survey showed. The largest number of beggars found on a single day was 11.

The beggars were classified as regular, frequent and intermittent. Nine of the "regulars" were found to be handicapped in some way. Ten displayed commodities for sale. Frequent beggars are those who ask for alms "only as a side line and when the returns should be unusually good," the report states. The intermittent beggars are those seeking a nickel or a dime on infrequent occasions.

The No. 1 beggar of St. Louis was said to be a partly-paralyzed Negro who has been arrested 19 times in the last five years. He rides to work daily on a street car, arriving at Broadway and Olive about 9:30 a. m.

His daily route, it was stated, is up Olive to Seventh, north to Washington, east to Sixth and south to St. Charles street. After luncheon at a five-and-ten-cent store, he goes over the same route before boarding a street car for home, the survey stated. His "working day" is regularly seven hours.

The average earnings for a "regular beggar" were estimated at $3.70 a day, received from about 75 persons. The least successful beggar can make $3 a day, the report added.

Appended to the report was a discussion of "car washers," men and boys who wash or dust automobiles while the owner leaves it for a few minutes at the curb. "Territorial rights are so well defined that they are salable for amounts sometimes running as high as several dollars for good blocks," the report stated.

ST. CLAIR COUNTY GIVES UP BRIDGE PLAN

Board Votes to Abandon Proposal for $4,500,000 Span Over Mississippi.

Plans for the $4,500,000 highway toll bridge which St. Clair County proposed to erect across the Mississippi River were abandoned yesterday by the County Board of Supervisors, meeting at Belleville.

The supervisors voted 28 to 15 to give up the bridge plan because of opposition by the city of East St. Louis, which also has under consideration the erection of a highway bridge over the river. The resolution adopted yesterday had previously been tabled by the supervisors. The move to abandon the bridge plans was led by Chief Supervisor John Rogers of East St. Louis and W. M. Gray, a member of the Road and Bridge committee.

An ordinance authorizing St. Clair County to erect the west approach of the toll bridge was signed by Mayor Dickmann last January. The approach site was between Mullanphy and Florida streets, east of Broadway. The bridge plans called for the east approach to touch St. Clair avenue in East St. Louis. The East St. Louis bridge, for which a bond sale has been arranged, is to cross from Missouri avenue in East St. Louis to Franklin avenue.

MUCH CONFUSION IN MAKING SLATES FOR SCHOOL BOARD

Result of State Supreme Court's Order Allowing Nonpartisan Candidate a Place on Ballot.

INTEREST REVIVED IN SITE FOR NEGROES

President Sullivan, Favoring Re-Examination of Question, Thinks Agreement Is Possible.

Two developments have occurred in the campaign for five places on the Board of Education to be filled in Tuesday's election—political confusion in the making of Democratic and Republican slates of favored candidates, and a movement to rescind the board's action of last November in ordering a Negro grade school erected on the grounds of Vashon High School.

The slate-forming confusion arose from Wednesday's decision of the Supreme Court of Missouri, in a test of the bipartisan school board law, giving a non-partisan candidate for the board a place on the ballot.

In connection with the Negro school plan, which aroused bitter opposition from the Negro community and others, the board president, Dr. Francis C. Sullivan, announced yesterday that he favored re-examination of the site question. Furthermore, he advocated a conference with the contractors, to whom $245,340 in contracts were awarded in November for the new grade school, to seek "honorable termination" of the board's obligations. He was of the opinion an amicable agreement could be reached, if the board and the contractors approached the question in "a spirit of fair dealing and service to the public."

Just Speaking for Himself.

While the board, in selecting the Vashon site, was governed by a desire "to make use of an exceptional opportunity for improved instruction," the protests should be heeded, Dr. Sullivan declared. He emphasized tht he spoke for himself, not the board. A suit to enjoin the board from using the Vashon site, filed by Negro objectors, is pending. The question probably will come up at the board's next meeting, April 13.

Candidates for the board were asked by the Co-operative Civic Association, a Negro group leading the fight against the Vashon location, to express themselves on the question. Justice of the Peace George L. Vaughn, a member of the Executive Committee, announced that five of the 12 candidates have replied, all saying that they favored rescinding the choice of site.

These five were: Mrs. Haymer Lowenhaupt (Dem.) and Dr. Solon Cameron (Rep.), incumbents, and Charles H. Hilmer (Rep.), Abraham M. Soma (Dem.) and John W. Hays (Rep.), a Negro. Dr. Cameron disclosed in his reply that he intended, if re-elected, to move for reconsideration at the April meeting. Mrs. Lowenhaupt said she had protested against the Vashon site to the Instruction Committee monthly for the last four months.

All five also said they favored removal of the Waring School portable buildings from the Vashon grounds and erection of a new grade school on a separate site. Further, they said they favored equal educational rights for white and Negro children.

One Reply to Questionnaire.

The Race Relations Department of the Community Council, which joined in the protest against the Vashon site, also sent a questionnaire to board candidates. Mrs. Lowenhaupt's reply is the only one which has been made public. In it she set out at length her opposition to the Vashon site, her desire for improved educational facilities for Negroes and her willingness to hear any bona fide protest.

The political confusion over the school board election resulted largely from the failure of the Supreme Court of Missouri to issue an opinion as yet in the suit testing the bi-partisan law. The Court merely granted an order for inclusion of the name of Dr. Paul W. Preisler on the ballot as a non-partisan running for a full term.

Three Democratic incumbents—Mrs. Lowenhaupt, Richard Murphy and Thomas F. Quinn—had filed for two full terms to be filled by Democrats. Two Republican incumbents—Dr. Cameron and Emil J. Barth—and three other persons—Hilmer, Hays and Mark D. Eagleton—had filed for two full Republican terms. Rather than placing the nine full-term candidates in a single listing, the Election Board has provided for the ballot three columns, with the respective political designations and with instructions to vote for any four.

In addition a separate portion of the Democratic column will list three candidates for an unexpired term which was to have been filled by a Democrat. All voters thus may vote for five school board members.

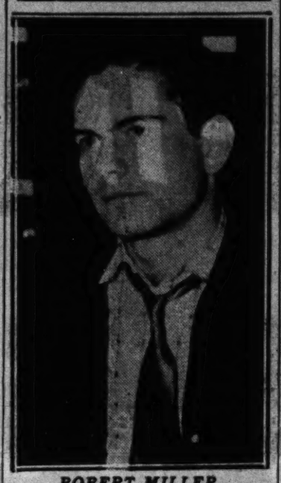
Threat of Court Action.

Dr. Preisler and his attorneys, George E. Duemler and Victor B. Harris, sent a communication to the Election Board yesterday, protesting against its decision to list the full-term candidates under party designations. They charged that the board was ignoring the plain effect of the court's decision, which, they held, required the board to list the candidates in a single column without any party designations, as was done before the bipartisan law was passed.

The protesters said that, unless notified tomorrow morning that the board has decided to abandon the use of party designations, they would file a court action in support of their contentions.

Within the last few days Democratic and Republican city committee members and other politicians have been busy making deals and trades for board candidates. In spite of the opportunity for Democrats to back three of their own party for full terms and Republicans to support four of their party, informed members of both committees, who would not be quoted, said to a Post-Dispatch reporter yesterday that most of the ward slates would back two Democrats and two Republicans for full terms.

HE WASN'T KIDNAPED



ROBERT MILLER, BOY SCOUT leader of Safford, Ariz., who admits that his story about being kidnaped in the Arizona desert and held six days as a prisoner by two young men near El Paso, Tex., was a hoax decided on to "save me embarrassment." He told Sheriff Chris P. Fox of El Paso that he abandoned his automobile near Duncan, Ariz., hitch-hiked to El Paso and made up his story after running out of money.

TWO ROBBERS TAKE $2700 FROM CLERK

Robbery of $2709 from a truck of the Leber Food Market near Eighth and Carr streets yesterday was reported to police by August Babenhausen, 72-year-old clerk for the market. Babenhausen told police two men, carrying revolvers, boarded the machine after he stopped to permit a fellow-employe, Vito Piazza, to deliver a message at his home, 721A Carr street. He said he was taking the money to the market, 524 Franklin avenue, from the Cass Bank & Trust Co., Thirteenth street and Cass avenue.

Piazza, planning to be married today, had gone into his house, Babenhausen continued, with the intention of reminding his brother-in-law that he was to work in his place at the market next week. The stop there was not unusual, the older clerk said, explaining that Piazza often went to his house for mail or like purposes.

As he waited, Babenhausen went on, two men carrying revolvers stepped up to the truck, one on each side, and crowded into the machine with him between them. One of them drove the truck several blocks to an alley north of Biddle street between Sixth and Seventh streets, he said, where they ejected him after taking $2609 in currency, which he had in a pocket, and $100 in quarters, carried on his lap in a sack.

The truck was found soon afterward in the 1300 block of North Eighth street. He had drawn the money at the bank, Babenhausen said, for payroll purposes and to provide change.

Babenhausen, who resides at 6622 Elmer avenue, St. Louis County, had been carrying payroll money for the market for six years and Piazza had accompanied him on most occasions during the last two years. Fred Leber is president of the market. The loss is insured.

10 UNIONS WITH C I O FORM JOINT COUNCIL

John Doherty, Director of Steel Workers Organizing Committee, Elected Chairman.

The Joint Council of C I O Unions, composed of 10 unions affiliated with John L. Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization, was formed yesterday afternoon at a meeting at council headquarters, 1041 North Grand boulevard, of 90 delegates.

Three of the unions forming the new organization were suspended from the Central Trades and Labor Union last Sunday because of their C I O affiliations, on mandate of William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. They were the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the Gas & Coke By-Products Workers, and the United Automobile Workers of America. Ben Gilbert, manager of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, the fourth C I O union suspended by Central Trades, announced his organization was in sympathy with the union, but would wait until the international convention three weeks from now to ask permission to join.

Other unions composing the membership were the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, the Electrical and Radio Workers Union, the United Shoe Workers, the United Textile Workers, Paper Box Workers, United Furniture Workers and the Lead Workers. The total membership is about 15,000, as compared to about 45,000 for the Central Trades and Labor Union. Half the membership of the new body is made up of the four groups suspended by Central Trades.

John Doherty, director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, was elected chairman. Other officers chosen were: Delmond Garst, an international officer of the automobile workers, vice chairman; Max Michelson of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, executive secretary, and Tom Morley, of the gas workers, financial secretary. They will serve without pay.

In a speech accepting his office, Doherty stressed the point that the new organization will not be in conflict or rivalry with the Central Trades and Labor Union. "We are not formed for the purpose of dualism," he said. "We are formed to organize the unorganized."

Dean Sweet at A. M. E. Church.

Dean Sidney E. Sweet of Christ Church Cathedral will speak on "The Challenge to America from Conditions in Europe" at 3 o'clock this afternoon at Metropolitan A. M. E. Church, Garrison and Lucas avenues.

Mrs. Fanita Terry Granted Decree in Uncontested Suit Against Robert B. Terry.

Mrs. Fanita Terry, a lawyer, obtained an uncontested divorce at Clayton yesterday from Robert B. Terry, also a lawyer, after a hearing before Circuit Judge Julius R. Nolte in which her character witnesses, Mrs. Walter Roos and Mrs. Howard Elliott, were lawyers and themselves married to lawyers.

Mrs. Terry, who resides at 6945 Cornell avenue, University City, was represented by counsel. Her husband, who had denied her charges of general indignities, was not in court. They were married in 1924 in Vandalia, Ill., and separated last March 2. She received alimony of $100 a month.

Nagel in Speech for Nolte Says Modern Democrats Do Not Seem to Favor Comptroller Asserts That Aroused Citizenry Has Been "Forced to Use Power of Ballot to Restore and Protect Integrity of Ballot."

Radio addresses in behalf of Comptroller Louis Nolte, a Republican, seeking his sixth consecutive four-year term, were made last night by Charles Nagel, an attorney, who was Secretary of Commerce and Labor in President Taft's Cabinet, and Rabbi Ferdinand Isserman of Temple Israel.

Following is the text of Nagel's address:

"It is a rare experience to speak in behalf of a candidate to whose credit so much may be said, and in whose defense nothing at all need be said. No argument for Louis Nolte is new, because the public is as well advised as the speaker can possibly be. His record is an open book. It anticipates every objection that may be urged, and refutes with entire conviction every attempt to challenge the merits of his outstanding service. While under our system of government he is nominated for Comptroller by the Republican party, he is not a partisan candidate. His Democratic supporters will speak for themselves. Indeed, his election is not in doubt, provided the voters' list are not falsified, and other irregularities are prevented. Even these he may be trusted to overcome, as he did four years ago, when his signal triumph gave proof of the public confidence. Such is his reputation that no candidate appeared against him for the Republican nomination; so that in spite of our confused election system, it is our privilege to vote for a candidate who is our obvious choice.

"His Opponent Drafted."

"Even among the Democrats no one volunteered to oppose him, and his opponent had to be drafted. No one would say anything against him; but this alone can no more save his organization, than it can save him. The press with unyielding persistence has made the charge of election frauds so clear, that the mere promise of individual good intention cannot be accepted for answer.

"Mr. Nolte's promise is of a different character. He does not need the party. The party calls him to meet the public demand. He does not seek to persuade with declarations that may or may not be kept. He points to his record with the assurance born of experience, that he will adhere to the course that has been his in the past. He pretends to no more than that he is an old-fashioned honest official. Holding the Comptroller's office for 20 years and other positions prior to that, there is not one act in his public conduct, that has raised the remotest doubt of his integrity or his wisdom. In a few instances impatience was shown, because he appeared to be unduly rigid in the performance of his duty. But upon reflection even those who doubted, will admit that he, true to his oath, only refused to be driven by unreasoning impetuosity and impulse.

"All in all his record for official integrity is so unique that there is perhaps not a well-governed municipality in this country, in which his reputation is not known and honored. There is probably not an estimate made anywhere, of the rating of the securities of the City of St. Louis, in which our watchdog of the treasury does not form an element. So great has been Mr. Nolte's contribution to the fair name of our city that to permit him to go to defeat now would be a blemish upon our name, and might be taken as an abandonment of the safe policy that has been our boast and our protection.

"Why This Opposition?"

"If then I am right, as I think I am, is this picture of the candidate, and of our relations as voters to him, why this labored opposition to him. Apart from regard for the reputation of our city, it seems to me a certain good-will might go out to such a candidate. After all, we are a generous people, and it is not easy to withhold admiration for a man, who all alone made the shore in the unprecedented deluge four years ago, and came in unharmed amid all the wreckage that was then washed ashore. I ask myself what is the real reason for this oppositon to him. His age is well below 70 years, so he cannot be disqualified by the latest edict from Washington. Certainly there is nothing in his manner to mark him for popular dislike. He is so democratic in his general attitude that if we still had a Democratic party he might be suspected of belonging to it. His opponent thinks he has held the Comptroller's office too long. That depends upon the point of view. If we have the public interest in mind he cannot hold it too long. If we are merely thinking of a distribution of jobs, the motive for the point may be appreciated but hardly approved.

"Finally, Mr. Mason claims that Mr. Nolte is not entitled to all the credit for the city's achievements. I do not understand him to make that claim. He leaves it to others to show what the achievements of the present administration really are. For himself he only claims that he has at all times throughout his terms, Republican and Democratic alike, used his authority to prevent raids upon the city's strongbox. Such cases do not always reach the public ear; and we may wonder whether Mr. Nolte is not now regarded as an unwelcome obstacle to matured or prospectivet schemes. It is possible, of course, that he has to contend with a mere lust for absolute party control. I can understand the chagrin at finding that one solitary office has escaped so universal a sweep. It looks almost like a taunt to have this one man stand out. I have no desire to discuss former Republican administrations. Although always a supporter of Mr. Nolte, I was at times no more than a lukewarm supporter of other candidates; and even voted for a Democrat for Mayor at one of the Miller elections. But the partisan sweep under this administration, it seems to me, was unprecedentedly drastic. A few more Republicans might have been left in office just for appearance sake; especially since Mr. Nolte has retained Democrats whom he found to be competent and efficient.

New Deal and Comptrollers.

"I take it the stake must be larger than a few jobs. It must be that Mr. Nolte does not fit in the scheme of things. Modern democracy does not seem to favor comptrollers. They stop the compass from pointing in the desired way. The Comptroller General in Washington retired nearly a year ago and no successor has been appointed. It is said that the whole national organization is to be changed; that the control is to go to the Treasury Department, and that among other things the final inquiry into the correctness of expenditures is to be had after the payments have been made.

"But why continue? Why extol a candidate whose reputation is safe with the people. Why dwell upon puerile criticisms of him, the very futility of which suggests their motive.

"There is really only one question. May fraud enough be practiced this time to defeat Louis Nolte, in spite of his triumphs in the past? We are assured that false registration has been largely corrected. This may not be quite true, and we know that there are many phases of corruption besides false registration. We also know that during the past few years every kind of irregularity has been practiced, far beyond anything that has ever been known in our city and State. This appalling condition has been urged upon us with both boldness and persistency by the press.

"It is for us not only to weigh its danger for this or that candidate, but to strike whenever we can at its very roots. A corrupt organization which is so widespread, that it embraces even election judges and clerks of the opposing party, must be reckoned with as a ruthless enemy of the most cherished principles of democratic government. It is useless to boast that our house is our castle, when the very foundation of the democratic structure is being undermined. This is the time to strike, regardless of consequences to person or to interest, be it persons whom we regard as friends, or public projects to which we give enthusiastic support. We want the truth; for upon it our salvation depends. Since our efforts to get the truth have so far been frustrated, by technicality or by machinations of one sort or another, we have but one means left, which is to strike at the political beneficiaries of the rotten system. So long as a candidate hesitates or refuses to denounce that system, we need have no compunctions. For so long as a candidate is willing to indulge these intolerable and humiliating conditions, we have a right to treat him as disqualified for office.

"Register a Rebuke to Evil."

"I have said this much because no one can know how corrupt practices may affect the fate of Mr. Nolte, in whose behalf I speak. But I have referred to these political conditions more especially, because no citizen can be asked to speak, without the privilege to express his disgust and his condemnation of a situation, that should arouse the protest of every decent member of our community. This means not only a challenge of words. It means action, and action means votes, to register a public rebuke to evil forces that seek to undermine our democratic institutions. The election of proper candidates is of great immediate importance.

"But the unprecedented outrages that have been perpetrated at the polls during the last few years have never been atoned for. They call for deserved repudiation; and this we now have our first chance to administer. We have been driven to use the power of the ballot to restore and to protect the integrity of the ballot."

"Personality and Principle."

Rabbi Isserman said that in speaking in behalf of Nolte's candidacy he was departing from precedent, since he had limited himself in public utterances to discussion of principles rather than of persons. But, he continued, he felt he should speak for Nolte "because in his candidacy it seems to me a personality and a principle have met.

"To me it seems that Mr. Nolte has a moral claim on the office he holds. If you vote for him you express gratitude to a good and faithful servant. If you vote against him you become an unjust and unfair employer who discharges a workman for no cause. By his splendid public record, Mr. Nolte has merited non-partisan support. Though he wears a Republican label, he has earned Democratic and Republican suppjort."

2100 CHILDREN TAKE PART IN SPRING REVUE

Community Centers' Show Gay in Costumes and Spirit; 3500 Attend.

Twenty-one hundred children, meticulously trained in dancing and singing in the six community centers, presented their third annual spring revue yesterday in the Municipal Auditorium before a capacity audience of 3500 persons.

It was a constantly changing series of gay costumes and spirited dances that was unfolded on the large stage of the opera house.

Girls dominated the show, except for one number. About 30 boys, lusty singers and spirited dancers, came into their own with the "Shoe-Shine Boy" number. They wore sweaters, caps and jackets. Charles Bartman of Sherman Center was the solo tap dancer.

Two other boys were in the spotlight, Joe McCarthy, also from Sherman Center, who sang several numbers, and Bob Hardy, who performed a waltz with Catherine Burke.

Girls Run Down Aisles.

Before the performance began, little girls with ribbons in their hair ran up and down the aisles, frequently falling. The children had come in double-decked busses from the various community centers and were impatient for the show to start, applauding again and again whenever an accompanist or piano mover appeared on the stage.

There were many mothers, with babies who dozed in their laps or cried loudly when disturbed by the music. Older boys and girls were fascinated by their springy seats or awed by the disappearing musician's platform. When the performers who had been in the early part of the show finished their dances, they came out to see the rest, only to find a scarcity of seats. Many sat on the carpeted floor in the aisles.

The first section of the program was entitled, "Mickey Mouse's Birthday Party." It began with a song and dance by the youngest children from Sherman Center, whose enormous white gloves and bobbing tails made them look very much like Walt Disney's creations.

"Only Decent Kind of Candy."

Girls in huge orange and blue hats, representing lollipops, were next. They described lollipops as "the only decent kind of candy." "It's the lick upon the stick, guaranteed to make you sick," was another line in the song. They then demonstrated how to lick the stick.

The audience was highly amused by one of Soulard Center's gingerbread man, a small girl with long curls who had difficulty holding up her trousers.

Negro girls from Adams Center, dressed as candy kisses, found the faster they danced the better spectators liked it.

The second episode, "Join the Navy and See the World," included dances by sailors and representatives of Hawaii, England, Scotland, France, Italy, Holland, Japan, Egypt and Switzerland—all appropriately dressed.

The third episode, "Paints and Patches," featured the singing of Joe McCarthy and dancing by older girls. Among the numbers were a Florodora girl song, a ballet interpretation of "The Way You Look Tonight," and the final dance and song, "One, Two, Button Your Shoe."

Let Canute Water

RE-COLOR YOUR Gray Hair

SIMILAR TO NATURE'S OWN YOUTHFUL SHADE

23 YEARS WITHOUT INJURY TO A SINGLE USER

Canute Water is a pure, colorless liquid of wonderful properties. When you apply this crystal-clear fluid to your gray, faded or streaked hair, it will again appear youthful, lustrous and uniform in color.

Not a single person has ever been injured by the use of Canute Water in over 23 years. This exceptional record is your guarantee that it is perfectly safe to use.

Easy to Use

Because of its safety, cleanliness and dependability, you can use Canute Water alone, in the privacy of your own room. No previous experience is necessary. Simply wet your hair with it and allow to dry.

The time of day or the state of the weather makes no difference when using Canute Water. Apply it at your convenience. And since it does not alter the texture of your hair, you may curl, wave or set it—or get a permanent—as usual.

Speedy Action

It requires between one and three applications to re-color hair to its proper shade. The treatment can be completed in a single day.

And when your hair has once been re-colored, a single treatment, given only once a month, is sufficient to keep it that way. No more attention is necessary.

Never Fails

No matter what caused your hair to become gray, Canute Water will positively overcome it. There are no exceptions.

Even if you have used some other hair coloring, it will be a revelation to you to see what Canute Water can do for your hair.

Amazing Results

Canute Water is neither sticky nor greasy. It leaves your hair clean and natural to the touch. There's not even a suggestion of "dye". Neither is it just a hair "darkener". Canute Water imparts a color similar to nature's very own.

Lasting Color

Even your most intimate friends will be unable to distinguish the re-colored hair from your natural. And the new color remains in your hair, permanent against sun, air, salt-water and shampooing.

So, if you are still young — if you still care what others think — and if you are not quite ready to be classed with the "old folks" get a bottle now. It will solve your problem so completely that you, yourself, will be astonished.

STORM HOLDS UP AID FOR DISABLED SHIP

One Vessel Arrives at Position Given in Mid-Atlantic but Fails to Find Freighter.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 3.—Severely battered by a mid-Atlantic gale, the British steamer Zealandic wirelessed tonight that heavy seas prevented it from proceeding further in answer to repeated distress calls of the disabled German freighter Borkum.

The Borkum was reported crippled and leaking about 1000 miles east of New York.

"Our steering house damaged by heavy seas. Cannot do anything for S.S. Borkum until weather moderates," the Zealandic wirelessed at 7:18 p. m.

Nosing its way through high waves and a thick mist the Zealandic radioed an hour earlier to the Radiomarine Corporation.

"Still searching for the S. S. Borkum, which is still sending distress calls periodically. Zealandic at position given, but unable to find the Borkum."

Two other steamships drove through the storm to aid the British ship in its search. The Borkum, its radio receiver inoperative, reported its stearing gear disabled and that it was taking water through its storm-wrenched plates.

The Radiomarine Corporation said it had been unable to confirm an earlier report that the Zealandic had sighted the distressed vessel. That report said contact with the Borkum had been established at 2:50 p. m. after a search of several hours. The German vessels distress signals began early today, and were relayed to radio stations here by ships at sea.

The SOS gave the Borkum's position as latitude 40.02 N. and longitude 35.21 W., which would place the ship about 1000 miles east of New York. It sailed from Newport, England, on March 25, bound for Havana, Cuba, and Mexican and Texas ports.

Four boats—the German steamship Ehrenfels, the French Colombie, the British Tamaroa and the Zealandic—started toward the Borkum. Then the Tamaroa dropped out.

REFUSES TO SET ASIDE RULING AGAINST CONDEMNATION AWARD

Judge Declines to Change Decision Preventing Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Egan From Collecting.

Circuit Judge Joseph J. Ward declined yesterday to set aside a ruling which prevented Mr. and Mrs. Patrick J. Egan from collecting $15,000 from the city for a condemnation award for land, used in construction of the express highway, at Taylor avenue and West Papin street.

An award for the property of $11,290 later was raised to $15,000 after Circuit Judge Eugene J. Sartorius had sustained exceptions filed by the Egans to the original finding. The city then filed motion for new trial on the ground that the amount was excessive, and decision on that motion is pending.

Attorney Ford W. Thompson, representing the property owners, asserted that his clients were being denied their rights as long as they were denied a writ of execution, which would enable them to collect the sum awarded them by the City Permanent Board of Condemnation Commissioners.

HUMANE SOCIETY TO TRADE CAMERAS FOR AIR RIFLES

Offer Made to 50 Children as Feature of Be Kind to Animals Week.

The first fifty children who offer to surrender their air rifles will receive cameras in exchange from the Humane Society of Missouri as a feature of Be Kind to Animals Week, which will begin next Sunday. Offers to trade will be accepted that day, President Gerald B. O'Reilly said yesterday.

"Thousands of birds and small animals are killed and wounded yearly by thoughtless boys with air rifles," he explained. "We want to educate them to shoot with cameras instead of guns."

Each day of the week has been designated to point out some lesson in the humane treatment of animals. On Humane Sunday ministers will explain the purpose of the week from the pulpit; Monday is Bird Day; Tuesday, Animal Safety Day; Wednesday, Animal Health Day, when animals may be taken to certain veteranarians for a free examination; Thursday, Horse Day; Friday, School Day, when children will be asked to sign a pledge, written by Edgar Guest.

LEXINGTON, Ky., April 3.—An information charging Dr. J. M. Ferguson, head of the U. S. Veterans' Hospital here, with fraud in connection with obtaining a World War pension, was filed late today in Federal Court.

Dr. P. K. Foley and Dr. Ben Wilson Smoak were charged jointly in other informations with aiding Dr. Ferguson obtain the pension through affidavits.

BAR SUIT ALLEGES ILLEGAL LAW PRACTICE

Court Asked to Restrain Automobile Owners' Protective Association.

An injunction suit to prevent the Automobile Owners' Protective Association, Inc., from continuing to make contracts which are alleged to constitute a method of unauthorized practice of law was filed in Circuit Court yesterday by the St. Louis Bar Association.

Also named in the suit are George E. Mauer, president; L. A. O'Leary, secretary, and Charles B. Felton, manager. The company has offices at 806 North Grand boulevard.

Contracts represented as automobile insurance are sold in the form of certificates of membership, the petition alleges. In reality, it contends, they are not contracts of indemnity but, in effect, agreements for rendition of legal services by others who are not licensed attorneys. The company is said to advise members as to legal liability in connection with claims against them or in making claims against others.

"The contracts," the petition alleges, "are void, illegal and improper, and constitute a method of unauthorized practice of law by persons or corporations not licensed and having no right to practice law in the courts of this State."

Officers of the company on Feb. 20, 1936, said salesman who had represented "service contracts" as indemnity insurance had been discharged and that contracts bore a red stamp, "Not Indemnity Insurance."

At the company's offices a Post-Dispatch reporter was told that Mauer was out of the city, O'Leary and Felton could not be reached for a statement.

The injunction petition was signed by Samuel H. Liberman, president of the St. Louis Bar Association, and the following members, constituting its Committee on Unauthorized Practice: Harry Gershenson, C. O. Inman, C. W. McElwee, J. R. Green, B. M. Fairfield, W. E. Chapman and R. F. O'Bryan.

'MINISTRY OF ITALIAN AFRICA'

Name of Office to Be Changed and Colonies to Be Sections.

By the Associated Press.

ROME, April 3.—A "Ministry of Italian Africa" will be created soon to replace the Ministry of Colonies.

Italy's overseas possessions then no longer will be called colonies, but sections of the empire.

A significant feature of the new ministry will be the representation of Arab chieftains of Libya, in tribute to Premier Mussolini's "spiritual alliance" with Islam during his visit to Libya last month.

CZECHOSLOVAK'S VIEW OF AMERICAN INDUSTRY

Jan A. Bata, Shoe Manufacturer, Says There Is Less Labor Trouble in Europe.

The prevalence of sit-down strikes in the United States is one reason why the Bata Shoe Co. of Czechoslovakia, one of the world's largest manufacturers, has decided not to build factories in this country, Jan A. Bata, head of the concern, indicated yesterday in an interview at the Jefferson Hotel.

He is making a world tour, partly by airplane, to study world markets and talk with his representatives in various countries. "I want to know what people have to say and what they are thinking," he explained.

Tall, broad-shouldered and with hair closely cropped, he attracted attention in the hotel lobby by his summer clothing, a light suit, white shoes, blue bow tie and yellow cane. He is 38 years old and has been president of the shoe concern since the death of his brother, Thomas, in an airplane crash five years ago.

Fewer Troubles in Europe.

Manufacturers in Europe have fewer troubles than those in the United States, he asserted. Sit-down strikes have not occurred in Bata factories because the workers are looked after even in the hours when they are not working, he continued. Homes are supplied "at very modest rates," and foods are sold at fair prices, "so the workers are not robbed."

State insurance is provided against sickness and injury and workers get free medical and dental care, as well as free hospitalization, Bata said. Reminded that the charge has often been made that his workers get extremely low wages, he insisted their average pay is $25 a week.

The Bata concern, which began as a small shoe repair shop operated by Thomas Bata in Czechoslovakia, now has factories in Germany, Poland, France, England, Holland, Switzerland, Jugoslavia, Egypt, Syria, India, Iraq and the Dutch East Indies.

The Bata brothers learned American mass production methods by working in New England shoe factories. They adapted these methods to their own unique system of dealing with labor.

Interested in Artificial Cotton.

One object of Bata's visit to the United States is to study the possibilities of greater use of artificial cotton. It is cheaper and has better technical properties, he said. "Liking or disliking it doesn't matter; when the economic situation makes the use of substitutes necessary as a matter of life or death for the manufacturer, he must use substitutes," Bata said.

The Bata concern has about 2000 retail establishments in the United States, but is not increasing its sales here because of rising duties, Bata said. Unless the duties are lowered, he indicated, Czechoslovakia will find it necessary to raise barriers against American cotton, which it imports in large quantities.

REGISTRATION CHECK LISTS 3195 NOT FOUND

This Is in Total of 36,888 Canvassed — Orders to Challenge Issued.

A compilation of reports made by special deputy election commissioners yesterday, after a selective canvass of registration in districts where fraud was suspected, showed that 3295 persons out of 36,888 whose names were checked were not found.

William H. Woodward, chairman of the Board of Election Commissioners, said the result was by no means alarming and that he had expected a larger percentage. The number not found includes the names of persons who has transferred their registration from one precinct to another upon moving following the registration of Feb. 18. No total of the number of such transfers was obtainable, although Woodward said it was large.

Since time did not permit the usual procedure of notifying those not found to appear at the office of the Election Board to offer proof of their right to vote from the residence from which they were registered, the list of names will be given judges and clerks at Tuesday's city election with instructions to challenge them when they appear to vote. Such persons may vote on proof of their legal right to do so.

The largest percentage of persons not found was in the Fifth Ward, stronghold of State Senator Mike Kinney. Of 1736 questioned there, 328, or 19 per cent, were reported not found. The percentage in Jimmy Miller's Fourth Ward was 12, canvassers being unable to find 164 of 1357 sought.

The largest number not found in any ward was 495 in the Seventeenth, where the names of 3940 were checked, but the percentage was only 8. No canvass was made of the Fourteenth Ward, in which Mayor Dickmann resides, since the district is made up almost entirely of single-family dwellings and lists appeared to be proper.

Members of the Election Board conferred with Circuit Attorney Franklin Miller yesterday, discussing plans for the city election. Miller provided a list of questions to be put to each person whose right to vote is challenged. They are designed to improve the chance of making a case in prosecution of any persons attempting to vote fraudulently.

Asked if the grand jury would be in session election day, Miller said he did not think that would be necessary.

More than 300 names have been added or changed on registration lists by order of the Circuit Court since the Feb. 18 registration. In some instances persons transferred their registration to other precincts.

Those unable to register because of illness or absence from the city on registration day qualified as voters before the court after questioning by Roscoe Anderson, attorney for the Election Board.

Talk on Cancer Control.

Dr. Frederick Emmert, assistant in gynecology at Barnard Free Skin and Cancer Hospital, will talk on cancer control at 2 p. m. next Tuesday before the Mothers' Club at the Gundlach School, 2931 Arlington avenue. Ford "60" owners report 22-27 miles per gallon

LONG BEFORE the 60-horsepower Ford V-8 engine was offered to America, we knew it was capable of unusual economy.

Two years' hard usage in England and France had proved that. Tests of all kinds proved it again.

But in keeping with Ford policy, no mileage claims were made until they could be established in actual service.

Now the story can be told. . . . The new Ford "60" is more than meeting expectations! Thousands of private owners, cab companies, and fleet operators report averages of 22 to 27 miles per gallon of gasoline. That is the highest mileage in Ford history—and Ford cars have always been famous for economy!

If you want a big car for a small budget, see and drive the Ford "60." It's available in five standard body types.

It's just as roomy, sturdy and safe as the Ford "85." It has the same distinctive modern design. It delivers V-8 smoothness and quiet even at speeds up to 70 miles an hour. And, best of all, it brings you its brilliant operating economy at the lowest Ford price in years!

DICE LOSER SHOT IN ROW; HE ASKED FOR MONEY BACK

After Drinking Joseph Kennedy Decides Game Is Crooked, Hits Elzay Wicks.

Joseph Kennedy, a used automobile salesman, 28 years old, was shot in the back and wounded seriously yesterday morning in a fight with Elzay Wicks, a granite cutter, in Wicks' room at the Windsor Hotel, 4209 Lindell boulevard.

Wicks, who told police he fired two shots at Kennedy after Kennedy had struck him in the mouth with his fist, said the fight started when Kennedy demanded the return of some money he had lost in a dice game.

Kennedy was lying in the downstairs hall of the hotel when police arrived. Taken to City Hospital, he refused to tell police who shot him, or where. He said he had been out all night drinking at "10 or 11" places, and that "some guy" shot him. He lives at 4438 Forest Park avenue.

Bleeding from a bruised mouth, Wicks was in his second floor room. He gave police his pistol, with which he said he had shot Kennedy. Two empty cartridges were found in the room and an ice pick, which a bellboy said had dropped from Kennedy's clothing, was turned over to police.

A third man present during the shooting was Ernie Edlich, a bartender, 4223 McPherson avenue. He was taken to the Newstead Avenue Police Station for questioning.

"Kennedy and Edlich came to my room about 8 o'clock this morning," Wicks told police. "They had a bottle of whisky with them, and we had several drinks."

"Then Kennedy got angry. He said, I, Edlich and another man each owed him about $40 because, he said, the dice were 'loaded.' Kennedy hit me on the mouth and knocked me over the bed. I jumped up and got the pistol from a dresser and shot at him. He and Edlich ran out of the room."

MURPHY DOOR BED CO. PLAN TO REORGANIZE APPROVED

Provides for Payment of 25 Per Cent of $12,627 in Claims of Unsecured Creditors.

A plan of reorganization for the Murphy Door Bed Co. of St. Louis, providing for payment of 25 per cent of the $12,627 in claims of unsecured creditors, was approved yesterday by Federal Judge Charles B. Davis. Under the plan, filed March 4, creditors will receive 10 per cent in cash and 15 per cent in notes at 6 per cent.

A new corporation will be formed, with 2500 shares of preferred stock at $10 and 5000 shares of no par value common stock, and present stockholders will receive one share of each for every four shares of the old corporation stock. Guy S. Martin will make available $11,000 to provide immediate working capital and will have the privilege of buying all unsubscribed stock up to that amount. A debt of $11,316, owed the firm by its president, Hiram C. Martin, will be reduced to $5500 and he will continue as head of the company.

CENTURY CO. VOTE ON OUTSIDE UNION

Employes' Council Chairman Reports 942 Workers Against, 190 For.

Employes of the Century Electric Co., 1806 Pine street, taking a secret ballot yesterday, voted against outside union representation by a large majority, according to announcement by Henry A. Weber, chairman of the Century Electric Employes' Works Council.

The vote, Weber stated, was 942 to 190 against outside union representation. The ballots of 87 men on the night shift had not been counted and 50 employes were absent yesterday, according to the announcement.

A mass meeting of Century employes has been called for 2 o'clock this afternoon at Carpenters' Hall, Grand boulevard and Cozens avenue, to discuss a strike for recognition of the United Electrical and Radio Workers, a Committee for Industrial Organization union which is conducting a strike at the Emerson Electric Manufacturing Co. and is seeking to organize 12,000 electrical plant employes in St. Louis. The union has organized a group of Century workers.

R. J. Russell, vice-president and secretary of the Century Electric Co., is chairman of the membership committee of the powerful National Metal Trades Association, which prohibits members from dealing with striking employes "in a body," according to revelations to the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee.

40 on Strike at East St. Louis & Interurban Water Co.

Two new strikes were called and another was settled in East St. Louis Friday.

Forty maintenance and construction employes of the East St. Louis & Interurban Water Co. struck for a wage increase to $1 an hour. The men are members of Laborers' Local Union 100, American Federation of Labor, and had received 67 and 87 cents an hour under a previous wage contract.

The strikers are picketing a garage back of the company's offices, 513 Missouri avenue. There was no interruption in water service to 15 East Side communities supplied by the company.

Members of the United Rubber Workers' Local Union 42, affiliated with the Committee for Industrial Organization, went on strike for union recognition and a wage increase of 30 cents an hour at the plant of A. Schulman, Inc., rubber reclaimers, 1401 Mississippi avenue. The plant employs 28 machine operators and laborers, who were paid 50 cents and 35 cents an hour.

A strike at the American Asphalt Roofing Corporation, Thirty-third street and St. Clair avenue, which had been in progress since March 25, was settled when the company granted wage increases and recognized six American Federation of Labor craft unions. The plant employs 125 men, who had been paid 43 to 68 cents an hour, and were granted increases to 55 and 88 cents.

Pay rates at the roofing and paint plant of the Barber Asphalt Co., in Venice, will be increased tomorrow, it was announced by M. S. Darrow, superintendent. The workers are not organized.

About 150 of the 200 employes will receive an increase in minimum rates from 48 to 55 cents an hour. Employes receiving more than the minimum will be given smaller increases. A five-day, 40-hour week will be adopted.

"Magnetic Healer" Held in Death.

By the Associated Press.

CLINTON, Ill., April 3. — Mrs. Lena Arthington, 35 years old, a self-styled "magnetic healer," was bound to the grand jury under $7500 bond today by Justice of the Peace Frank E. Bell on a charge of murder in connection with the death of a 19-year-old mother. A Coroner's jury decided Thursday Mrs. Fred Smith, mother of two children, died Tuesday night of septicemia after an illegal operation.

INDICTED JOPLIN CHIEF OF POLICE QUITS POST

Charge Will Be Dropped in June if Court Finds Resignation Bona Fide.

By the Associated Press.

JOPLIN, Mo., April 3.—Police Chief Harry J. Mead, indicted by a special grand jury this week on charges of negligence in office, resigned today.

Judge Ray E. Watson in Circuit Court at Carthage announced that the indictment against Mead would be dismissed in the June term of court if the resignation were bona fide.

Roy Coyne, Mead's attorney, presented to the Court Mead's resignation in writing, dated March 31, and its acceptance by Mayor A. C. Maher of Joplin under yesterday's date. Mead and Maher were among four officials indicted Tuesday by a special grand jury which investigated vice conditions in the county.

"When the Court is satisfied that action has been taken and is a bona fide separation from the department, it will nolle the case on the Attorney-General's recommendation," Judge Watson said. "A nolle in this case can't be considered and the Court wants to protect himself and the Attorney-General."

Coyne also had presented to the Court a letter from William Orr Sawyers, Assistant Attorney-General, who conducted the grand jury investigation, instructing that the indictment against Mead be dismissed on the presentation of the resignation to the Court and its acceptance by the Mayor.

Coyne told the Court that Mead had obtained a job with a mining company and his intention to sever his connection with the Police Department was sincere. Mead was not in court.

Mayor Maher said he had no intention of resigning because of his indictment and would fight the case.

CITY CANDIDATES CLOSE CAMPAIGN, ELECTION TUESDAY

Mayor, Comptroller, 14 Aldermen and Five Members of Education Board to Be Chosen.

412,000 ELIGIBLE TO GO TO POLLS

Democratic Workers' Mass Meeting Today—Concentrated Effort Made to Defeat Nolte.

The campaign for the municipal election Tuesday was virtually concluded last night, although additional meetings will be held today and tomorrow by party workers to make final plans for the election, in which a Mayor, Comptroller, 14 Aldermen from the odd-numbered wards and five members of the Board of Education will be selected.

The Democratic organization, confident of retaining control of the city administration for another four years, will hold a city-wide mass meeting for party workers at 2 o'clock this afternoon at the Municipal Auditorium. Final meetings of both Republican and Democratic City Committees and other meetings of party workers are scheduled to be held tomorrow.

Four parties and a non-partisan organization have filed candidates for the various city offices. In addition to the two major parties, Democratic and Republican, the Socialists have a complete city ticket, the Socialist-Labor party has candidates for Mayor and Comptroller, and the Citizens' Non-Partisan Committee has candidates for Mayor, Comptroller and four places for the Board of Aldermen.

Twelve in School Board Race.

In addition, there are 12 candidates, six Democrats five Republicans and a non-partisan candidate, for the Board of Education. Five places are to be filled, two by Democrats and two by Republicans for full six-year terms, and one by a Democra for a four-year unexpired term.

The candidates listed on the separate ballot provided for the Board of Education will include three Democrats for the two full terms, five Republicans for two full terms, three Democrats for the unexpired term and the non-partisan, Dr. Paul W. Preisler, for a full term. Dr. Preisler's filing, in connection with a movement to test the constitutionality of the bipartisan School Board law, has caused the Election Board to issue instructions that voters may vote for any four of the nine candidates for full terms, although technically two Democrats and two Republicans are to be selected.

412,400 Are Registered.

Total registration for the election is about 412,400, the largest in the city's history for a municipal election. It is expected that the total vote will approximate 300,000 or about 75 per cent of the registration, although it may be less, because there is less general interest this year than four years ago when the vote totaled 297,543 or 77 per cent of the registration of 385,012.

The election will be the first general election held under direction of the new Election Board, recently appointed by Gov. Stark, composed of William H. Woodward, chairman, and Claxton C. Allen, Democrats and Adolph C. Wiget, secretary, and former Gov. Henry S. Caulfield, Republicans. Special deputies appointed by the board will cruise about the city Tuesday, visiting polling places to guard against fraud.

Interest, of course, has largely centered on the contest for Mayor between Bernard F. Dickmann, Democrat, the city's present chief executive, seeking re-election, and Oliver T. Remmers, former head of the Police and Election Boards and former chairman of the Republican City Committee, the Republican nominee.

Effort to Defeat Nolte.

The Democratic organization this year, however, is concentrating its forces in an effort to defeat Comptroller Louis Nolte, the only Republican elective official at City Hall, who is seeking his sixth term, the stake being the 81 jobs under the Comptroller's direction which the Democrats are anxious to capture. Nolte's Democratic opponent is Lawrence Boogher, former assistant vice-president of the Boatmen's National Bank, and a newcomer in municipal politics. Nolte, knowing he has a harder fight on his hands than in any previous campaign, has made an extensive speaking campaign for the first time since he first ran for Comptroller in 1917.

Remmers, a forceful speaker, has made a vigorous attack on Dickmann and the Democratic administration, criticising particularly the Mayor's silence on last year's election frauds and declaring that "sinister influences" control the administration. He has charged that Paul (Bev) Brown and Clarence (Gully) Niewen, liquor dealers and proprietors of a racing news service, boast of their power to control the City Hall and do control it.

Dickmann has declined to answer Remmers' charges, basing his plea for re-election on the assertion that the administration has saved the taxpayers approximately $9,000,000, as compared with the cost of the previous Republican administration. Statements of the savings reported in various city departments, together with a review of the four years of Democratic rule, were incorporated in an elaborate booklet, which the Mayor's campaign committee has distributed to voters, at a cost of $9000, paid by private contributions. Some of the claims made have been disputed.

ANNUAL POLICE RELIEF CIRCUS TO OPEN FRIDAY AT COLISEUM

Two Performances to Be Given Daily at 2 and 8 P. M., Until April 18.

The annual circus sponsored by the Police Relief Association will open Friday at the Coliseum, with two performances daily, at 2 and 8 p. m., until April 18.

For the show this year 80 acts, in which 350 performers will appear, have been engaged. More than 100 animals and about 40 clowns will participate.

Police Capt. Bernard Heggeman, president of the association, said about 35,000 tickets, each admitting two persons, have been sold so far for $1 each. The ticket sale is slightly behind that of last year, but the program, bulky with advertisements, is a record size, 376 pages.

The circus last year netted the association $58,000. Funds of the organization are used to pay pensions to widows and orphans of policemen and to retired policemen. Since the last circus 25 members have died, four of them killed in the line of duty.

WINANT FAVORS INTERNATIONAL TEXTILE N R A

Former Social Security Board Head Addresses Representatives of 24 Countries in Conference.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, April 3.—John G. Winant, president of the first World Textile Conference, hinted today that an "international N R A" and reciprocal trade pacts would help cure the industry's ills.

The former Republican Governor of New Hampshire and former head of the Social Security Board, spoke before representatives from 24 countries.

Referring to N R A, Winant said the United States "developed legislative controls in the textile industry which, even after the legislation itself disappeared, have had a lasting effect in raising social conditions in the industry."

"It is unreasonable to believe that what has been accomplished in this country through legislation may not likewise be accomplished throughout the world through the co-operative action of all countries?" he asked.

Winant recited efforts by the administration to reverse the "rising trend of world trade barriers" which he said were wiping out international commerce.

"In the light of this situation," he added, "the trade agreements program in which the United States is now engaged takes on a special significance" for the textile industry.

Translators Aid Delegates.

Delegates used desk earphones while translators repeated Winant's address in French, German and Japanese.

"The foreign contingent," said an official of the International Labor Office in Geneva, "is considerably excited by the rapid pace American leaders have set, and some are bewildered at the parade of panaceas which appear to be ready made for the conference."

The spokesman declined to be identified since the proceedings are under auspices of the labor organization and involve Government, employer and worker groups whose reactions have not been reported to the floor.

Discussing his address informally, Winant said he did not believe price fixing as practiced under NRA could be universally adopted by the textile manufacturers, but indicated he hoped for agreement on minimum wages and maximum hours.

"You will recall," he said when questioned on an "international NRA," that I stressed "co-operative action of all countries" in reference to uniform standards.

Foreigners' Attitude.

Foreign delegates have not permitted themselves to be quoted by the press, but observers said they appeared to be determined that the conference merely explore world textile problems and report its findings to the International Labor Office.

In his address Winant said the conference was significant outside the textile industry because, if its aims were accomplished, "we will leave our mark upon the efforts of all nations to find some solution of the fundamental and economic problems that face the world today."

Arthur Shaw, British workers' delegate, told the conference that a 40-hour work week should be put into effect as soon as possible. He said he thought the opposition of British employers might diminish if the short week were adopted by all.

H. B. Batter, director of the International Labor Office, pointed out that this was the first time textile employers and employes had met personally in world conference.

"This opportunity is not likely to recur in any immediate future," he said, "and I am confident this meeting will prove to be a landmark in the history of the industry."

The conference elected as vice-presidents J. Kitaoka, Japanese Government delegate; Arthur Shaw, British labor delegate, and H. C. Oersted, Danish employer delegate.

NEGRO COLLEGE SITE ON PENDLETON AVENUE

School Board's Selection Made Known by Transfer of Five Parcels of Realty.

With the transfer of five small pieces of property to the Board of Education, the site chosen for a new $500,000 Negro College has become known. It will front 283 feet on the west side of Pendleton avenue, extending between Cottage and Kennerly avenues. The lot, facing Tandy Park, a Negro playground, will run back half a block or more from Pendleton.

Three pieces of property on the Kennerly side and two on the Cottage side have been acquired by the board, which has opened negotiations for additional portions of the site. If the remainder cannot be obtained at acceptable prices, doubtless a condemnation suit will be filed.

The lots so far purchased are occupied by frame and brick cottages. Their aggregate frontage is 120 feet. The price, including the improvements, totaled $9950—an average of about $83 a front foot. On the basis of these figures, the board has not anticipated paying more than $70,000 to $75,000 for the entire site.

An east-west alley in the site would be vacated, with the consent of the city, and a north-south alley opened at the back of the school location.

On the south side of Tandy Park is Sumner (Negro) High School and on the north side the Turner School, for physically handicapped Negroes. On the east side is the St. Louis Colored Orphans' Home, a private institution, back of which is the city's new Homer G. Phillips Hospital, for Negroes.

Stowe Teachers' College, the school board's present institution for Negro girls, occupies a portion of the Simmons grade school building, 4318 St. Louis avenue. Removal of the college to the new structure would make space available at Simmons School for elementary classes which for years have been housed unsatisfactorily in portable units on the Sumner High grounds.

The School Board appropriated $500,000 for the site and structure of the college in February and ordered preliminary plans drawn. The new college will accommodate 300 pupils. It will be primarily for training girls as teachers, but Superintendent of Instruction Gerling, who proposed the plan, has expressed the hope that Negro boys might be admitted also for preparation as high school teachers. There has been inconclusive discussion, in addition, of opening the institution as a general college for Negroes. Payment for the school will be made from the board's general funds, unless the PWA approves a prospective request for a grant of 45 per cent of the structural cost.

SALESMEN WANTED

UNEMPLOYED MEN

YOU MUST READ

THIS UNUSUAL AD

This message is addressed to men in St. Louis and vicinity, who are looking for an opportunity of immediate employment, who have faith in themselves to do the things they will be taught how to do without any cost to them and with possibilities of earnings that may far exceed their expectations.

Any man who is unemployed and does not try to get work is a disgrace and liability to the community and the nation, if he does not take advantage of a position that is offered to him even though it be out of his regular line of work. Some of our men, who were unemployed a few years ago, heeded our call and went to work with us, have earned during these years of so-called depression (unknown to us as our business increased) more money than they previously had in their entire life. Many have had the pleasure of buying new homes, automobiles, have substantial bank accounts, with earnings as high as $5,000 and up a year. Why not give yourself a chance? You may also be one of the men who could enjoy this unusual experience in unusual times.

This message comes from one of the largest companies in its line in the world, whose products enjoy an enviable reputation and whose business is built on the soundest basis. We believe in paying a man all that he is worth and he is never handicapped by having to support a lot of dead wood, as, we are sorry to say, many business firms through their system have compelled a man to tolerate.

We are on an expansion program in St. Louis and we are going to employ a certain number of men, give them an opportunity to prove to themselves the sincerity of the above statement. If we do not find enough men to respond to this ad, we will then transfer, from our neighboring cities, men who answered a similar ad and have proved so successful that they are willing to go anywhere to work. We prefer, however, to get as many men locally as is possible and, if you are a man who is unemployed or employed in a position where you feel you are entitled to greater earnings and are willing to learn, adapt yourself to our methods, and can furnish good references as to your character and habits, we will be very pleased to grant you an interview and we will frankly tell you whether or not you are fitted for our work.

Read this message at least twice, then come in to Suite 512, Paul Brown Bldg., 7th and Olive Sts., and meet one of the company's executives in a personal interview, Monday between 9:15 a. m. and 1:15 p. m.—no other time.

RICHMOND HEIGHTS TO VOTE ON NEW SCHOOL DISTRICT

Mass Meeting to Decide on Incorporating In It Certain Territory Within Its Boundaries.

PLAN ATTACKED BY OPPONENTS

Maplewood and Clayton Stand to Lose Property They Assess — Other County Elections Tuesday

Municipal and school elections in St. Louis County Tuesday will include an unusual election in Richmond Heights, where voters will decide at a mass meeting at 2 p. m. at the City Hall whether a new school district shall be formed out of those parts of the Maplewood, Clayton, Price and Brentwood districts which lie inside the Richmond Heights city limits.

No municipal election is scheduled for Richmond Heights Tuesday, but city officials will be chosen in University City, Webster Groves, Maplewood, Clayton, Brentwood, Ferguson, Valley Park, Glendale, Shrewsbury, Ladue and Florissant, and village officials in Huntleigh, Bridgeton, Olivette, Ellisville, Des Peres, Beverly Hills, Oakland, Rock Hill, Pasadena Park, Royal Oak, Arbor Terrace and Peerless Park. School board members will be elected in the 91 county districts. No city election will be held in Kirkwood, which, like Richmond Heights, has the commission form of government and elected its Mayor and Councilmen last year for two-year terms.

University City Race.

In addition to the Richmond Heights town hall mass meeting on the new district, interest centers in the University City election, where former Mayor Eugene D. Ruth Jr., Alderman Matt C. Fogerty and Roger D. Moore, attorney, have been engaged in a hot race for Mayor.

The special election in Richmond Heights has aroused much interest not only there, but in adjoining communities, particularly Maplewood and Clayton, the school systems of which would be affected by formation of the proposed new district.

The only law relative to formation of new districts—passed many years ago and apparently intended for rural areas—calls for voting by inhabitants of the proposed district at a mass meeting. There are about 6000 registered voters in Richmond Heights and the Council room at the City Hall seats only 150.

Promises All Chance to Vote.

However, Dr. L. J. Dicks, dentist and chairman of a committee sponsoring the proposal, has declared that every qualified voted will be given an opportunity to vote, no matter how long the meeting lasts. Just which voters will be qualified will be determined by the chairman of the meeting, who will be elected by persons on hand when the meeting opens.

The chairman will appoint two tellers who will handle the details of voting and count the result. If the proposal is carried, then the voters present when the result is announced will immediately elect six directors—two for three-year terms, two for two years and two for one year. Each office must be voted on separately.

Opposition to Proposal.

Joseph Forshaw, head of the Richmond Heights School Protective Committee, which has been working actively against the proposal, charges that proponents are taking advantage of an outworn statute to railroad a proposition which should have careful consideration and be submitted to voters through modern election machinery. He points out that the hall may be packed by adherents of either side, who would elect the chairman and thus control the remainder of the activities. Forshaw rejected a proposal by Dr. Dicks that the opposing committees agree in advance on a chairman, declaring that there was no assurance the candidate agreed on would be elected.

About half of Richmond Heights is in the Maplewood school district and a fourth each in the Clayton and Price districts. The only portion in the Brentwood district is a small, uninhabited strip in the southwestern part of the city.

Maplewood's Objection.

Strong opposition to the proposed secession has arisen in the Maplewood district, 45 per cent of the assessed valuation of which is within Richmond Heights. About 1350 pupils, or 38 per cent of the total attendance, live in Richmond Heights. In the Clayton district about 10 per cent of the total assessed valuation is in Richmond Heights and 12 per cent of the pupils live there. Only 14 Price district pupils live in Richmond Heights.

Proponents of the new district say the school tax rate would be about $1.90 on the $100 valuation, compared with $2.10 in Maplewood, $1.40 in Clayton and 60 cents in Price. Of the $1.90, $1.30 would go for general purposes, 15 cents for retirement of a bond issue for a new high school and 45 cents for retirement of the Richmond Heights share of old bond issues in the other districts. Opponents argue the rate would be insufficient to provide education on a par with that available in the existing districts.

40,000 Fans See Opening Games In Coast League

By the Associated Press.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 3. INITIAL contests in four California cities sent the thirty-fifth Pacific Coast League baseball season on its way today. Portland, Seattle, the San Francisco Seals and Los Angeles won their opening games.

Largest opening-day crowd, 12,000 fans packed Seals' Stadium here and watched the Seals knock over their home town rivals, the Mission Reds, 7 to 6, with a five-run rally in the eighth inning.

At Sacramento, where Gov. Frank Merriam was among the 8500 fans, Seattle's Indians cracked in three runs in the ninth inning to defeat Sacramento, 6 to 4. Second Basemen Freddie Muller hit two home runs.

Los Angeles' Angels trimmed San Diego, 9 to 7, in the inaugural, before 11,223 at Wrigley Field.

Heavy hitting by Nino Bongiovanni helped Portland's Ducks down Oakland, 5 to 3, at Oakland, where 8000 saw the battle.

UNIVERSITY CITY WINS SEVENTH CLASS A STATE TRACK TITLE

By the Associated Press.

COLUMBIA, Mo., April 3.—University City won its seventh consecutive Class A track championship at the Missouri Interscholastic meet here tonight. The champions won or showed in eight of the nine events and rolled up 29 points.

Roosevelt High of St. Louis maintained second place throughout the meet and made 20 points.

The Missouri Military Academy won Class B with 21½ points, picked up in half a dozen events. Carrollton was second in the B division with a score of 13.

University City failed to show only in the 60-yard dash, first event on the program.

Other scores: Class A—St. Joseph Central, 15½; Joplin, 9; St. Joseph Benton, 6; Sedalia, 5; Normandy, 4; William Chrisman of Independence, 3; Maplewood, 3; Kirksville, 2½; Kirkwood, 1, and Webster Groves, 1.

Fulton took third place in Class B with 10½ points. Louisiana won 20 points, Marshall 7, St. Charles 6, Mexico 5, Eldon, Malden and Raytown, 4 each; Chillicothe and Holcomb, 3 each; Ruskin 2½, Odessa 1½, Ridge Way, Lebanon and Maryville, 1 each.

It was a bad night for records as two State indoor marks faded and another pair in Class B were erased.

Capt. Ray Alsbury of Roosevelt, whose 13 points gave him individual honors in Class A, moved over the 60-yard low barriers in 7.1 seconds in the preliminaries. He came back in the finals to clip a second from the old mark of 7.3 seconds but failed to duplicate his matinee performance.

Sol Schumitzky of University City bettered the old mark of 21 feet 8 inches in the broad jump by leaping 22 feet 2 inches. This mark, long with Alsbury's hurdle time, are State records.

Loren Wolfe of Fulton knocked down the established mark in the shot-put with a heave of 50 feet 8 inches in the Class B competition. Calhoun of Louisiana chalked up an indoor record in the class by leaping 21 feet 3½ inches.

ST. LOUIS PRO HAS SCORE OF 209 FOR 54 HOLES

By the Associated Press.

AUGUSTA, Ga., April 3. — Approaching and putting with a magic touch, Ralph Guldahl, tall, round-shouldered St. Louis professional, swept out in front of the field in the Augusta National golf tournament with a total of 209 after 54 holes in the battle for first-place money of $1500 today.

The 25-year-old Missourian was seven strokes under regulation figures for the distance. He picked up four of them with birdies on the last six holes of his third round 68, to overhaul Byron Nelson of Reading, Pa., the leader for two days.

While Nelson cracked under the par-shattering pace to take a 75 and drop into a tie for third place at 213, Bobby Jones, playing here for the fourth time since he abdicated his golfing throne in 1930, remained far down the list despite a nicely played 73, his best score in the annual tussle with the professionals.

Guldahl, victor last winter in the Augusta Open and the Miami-Biltmore in one of the greatest comebacks of recent years, caught up six strokes on young Nelson, who fired first and second rounds of 66-72.

Dudley in Second Place.

Shooting a 71, one under regulation figures, big Ed Dudley of Philadelphia, the home course professional, also pulled ahead of Nelson to advance to second place with a total of 212. Nelson dropped back into a deadlock with Lighthorse Harry Cooper of Chicago at 213.

It was Guldahl, who had but one three-putt green today, who missed a four-footer on the last hole that would have given him a tie with Johnny Goodman of Omaha, Neb., for the National Open crown at Chicago in 1933.

The stage appeared set for a spectacular finish when the field of 43 moves away tomorrow on the final 18-hole lap of the $5000 money scramble over a course designed by Jones for his annual frolic with the salaried players.

Jones said he played his best golf of the three days in manufacturing his 73, one over par, which advanced him into a tie for twenty-eighth place at 226, ahead of such well known campaigners as Henry Picard of Hershey, Pa., Gene Sarazan of Brookfield Center, Conn., Harold McSpaden of Winchester, Mass., and Craig Wood of New York.

It looked like a close battle over the final lap between Guldahl, Dudley, Cooper and Nelson. Although six strokes behind the leader, Johnny Revolta of Chicago was within striking distance with a 215

Sarazen Out of Running.

Victor Ghezzi, Deal, N. J., Italian, was in sixth place, a stroke back of Revolta. Both had par 72's for the third round. Sarazen, who blazed through to tie Wood in 1935 with the aid of his "double eagle" shot a 73 but with a 54-hole total of 227 was far out of the running.

Bracketed in eighth place with 217 totals were Jimmy Hines of Garden City, L. I., Al Watrous of Detroit, Leonard Dodson of Springfield, Mo., and Ky Laffoon of Chicago. Hines carded a third round 68, four under par, to jump from a half-way post in twenty-first place.

Jimmy Thompson of Shawnee-On-Delaware, Pa., was just a stroke back of this foursome and next stood Bobby Cruickshank of Richmond, Va., Wiffy Cox of Washington, D. C., and Sam Snead of White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., with 219's. Denny Shute of Boston, the National P. G. A. king, had 220.

Tony Manero of Salem, Mass., United States open champion, and Tommy Armour of Chicago, the veteran Scot, had 221's. The first 20 after 54 holes was rounded out by Willie MacFarlane of New York, Clarence Clark of Bloomfield, N. J., and Felix Serafin of Scranton, Pa., with 222's.

Charlie Yates of Atlanta led the field of six amateurs with a total of 223. He had a 74 today, and was two strokes in front of Chuck Kocsis, Detroit, (Mich.) star, and three ahead of Fred Haas Jr., of Baton Rouge, La.

PERRY BEATS VINES TO SQUARE SERIES

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., April 4. —Fred Perry and Ellsworth Vines squared at 20-all their series of tnnnis matches when the Englishman defeated Vines easily, 6—3, 6—3, here tonight.

George Lott of Chicago and Bruce Barnes of Texas took a set match in their two-set singles exhibition tennis matches when the English-bition. Perry and Vines teamed to 6—3, 2—6, 6—3.

Cardinals Will Test New Lineup in Game With Rochester Farm

By J. Roy Stockton.
Of the Post-Dispatch Sports Staff.

LAKELAND, Fla., April 3.—Baseball writers, transferred from other assignments to cover the Gas House Gang Cardinals as war correspondents, swooped down on the Redbirds' camp this afternoon, only to have a rainstorm force cancelation of the scheduled game with the Detroit Tigers.

The athletes were on the field despite the downpour, and a scattering of fans was in the stands, but it was still drizzling and cloudy 15 minutes before scheduled starting time, and after Mickey Cochrane and Frank Frisch had inspected the field, the customers were told over the public address system that there would be no ball game today.

Trial of Frisch's new lineup therefor was deferred until tomorrow afternoon, when the Redbirds meet their Rochester cousins at Daytona Beach. Frisch has decided to return to third base himself, to make Stanley Bordagaray his No. 1 center fielder and to give the bulk of the catching to Arnold Mickey Owen.

To Bolster Attack.

Frisch decided on the changes in the hope that they would bolster the attack and improve the defense. Terry Moore is all that could be desired as a defensive center fielder, but his batting has not been heavy and it has been evident for several weeks that the club needed more attacking power.

Gutteridge, who played spectacularly last fall after joining the Cardinals, has not fielded or batted up to expectations. He has made many overthrows, and many grounders have bounced off his glove. In his eagerness to make good, he has played with a stiffness that has not helped his defensive play.

Gutteridge and Moore for the last two weeks have been taking special batting practice, but neither has shown sufficient improvement to satisfy Manager Frisch.

"I don't know whether I'll be good enough to stay there," Frisch said last night, "but I'm going to give it

WRAY'S COLUMN

Heroes in the Making.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., April 3.

HAVE you ever had to wring a chicken's neck? Have you ever had to kill a pink-eyed, helpless looking rabbit and get him ready for stew and dumplings? Have you ever had to take Junior out to the woodshed and apply physical treatment for what ailed him?

If you have been through any one of these ordeals, you may have some feeling for a baseball coach in the town of Laredo, where are assembled some 100 young fellows from all over the nation, many at their own expense, who must be classified according to their ability in various minor league stratifications, or sent back home because they lack ability.

"This is just about the hardest assignment a man can get in baseball," grumbled Ray Cahill, Brownie scout, who is there with other Browns officials trying to grade men according to performance.

"It isn't so much grief to tell a player that he isn't quite ready for Class A and then send him to class B. If we give these kids any kind of a rating they still have hope. The misery comes in telling some of these youngsters that they better go home; that the future holds out nothing for them in a baseball way.

The High Cost of Hope.

"SEND one of these boys home and he almost falls over backward from disappointment. They just can't believe that they haven't the arm, the speed or the eye for baseball success.

"I've seen them actually cry. You know some of them have saved up money for months for this trip. They have dug up friends who send in a recommendation and of course we can't turn that sort of thing down. We have to look them over. Sometimes the friends do them a bad service by arousing their hopes.

"We try to weed out the hopeless as quickly as we can. Then we try to help the others. Some of them will be good ball players. Some will be good enough to get into the minors. Some will be good enough to get into the majors. Some will be good enough to stay there. Some will be good enough to get back there.

"But the percentage is against them all. Baseball is a tough game to get into and a tough game to stay in."

NEWARK, N. J., April 3.—Jimmie McClure of Indianapolis and Mrs. Dolores Kuenz of St. Louis were eliminated tonight from the mixed doubles division of the seventh annual United States table tennis championship in a surprise third-round upset by Mildred Wilkinson of Chicago and John Abrahams of New York, 21—23, 21—17, 17—21, 21—7, 21—19.

The defending champions in the women's doubles, Ruth Hughes Aarons of New York, world's singles champion, and Anne Sigman of New York, advanced to the third round of the women's doubles by scoring over Beatrice Kremsdorf, 14-year-old New Yorker, and Ruth Brewer of Brooklyn.

Mrs. Kuenz was upset in the third round of the women's singles by the comparatively unknown May Clothier of Arlington, Mass., in a thrilling five-setter. The scores were 21—15, 21—15, 10—21, 19—21, 21—18.

Jim Jackson of St. Louis advanced to the third round of the boys' singles when he defeated William Voght of Philadelphia, 21—16, 17—21, 21—13.

Bud Blattner of St. Louis and Ruth Aarons of New York won their second and third round mixed doubles matches. They defeated Miss Migneco and Kyger, 21—14, 21—19, 21—16, and then conquered Miss Stahl and Lowry in the third round, 21—18, 21—17, 13—21, 21—15.

ALLEN WINS AND LAURI IS CUE EVENT LEADER

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 3.—Onofrio Lauri, dark horse entry from Brooklyn, held sole possession of the world pocket billiard championship tournament leadership tonight after Benny Allen of Kansas City finished beating his nearest rival for the honors.

Allen not only prevented Willie Mosconi of Philadelphia from moving into a tie with Lauri, but posted the best game of the tournament in doing it. He whipped the Quaker City cueist 125 to 53 in eight fast innings, thereby cutting one frame from the previous best game, turned in earlier in the day by Andy Ponzi, former champion from New York, in downing Marcel Camp of Detroit, 125 to 56 in nine trips to the table.

Lauri took over the leadership with three victories in four starts by topping Joseph Diehl of Rockford, Ill.

Erwin Rudolph, former three-time title-holder from Cleveland, overwhelmed Irving Crane of Rochester, 125 to 49, in 13 innings for his second victory in three starts.

The standings:

Holdout Ruffing Stands Firm In Face of Ruppert Ultimatum

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, April 3.—Number One Holdout Red Ruffing settled himself more firmly in his chair today—as determined as ever to "sit it out" unless the New York Yankees meet his demand for a $16,000 contract.

The latest ultimatum from Col. Jacob Ruppert, owner of the world champions, that "Ruffing will sit in Chicago all year before I'll pay him more than $15,000," failed to shake the big right-hander who pitched 20 of the Yankees' 1936 victories. He said he agreed with everything the Colonel said, except that he would put it a little differently.

"Col. Ruppert says I can sit all summer before he'll pay me more than $15,000," Ruffing snapped. "Well, that's all right with me, only I say I'll sit right here until he offers me $16,000. That's $15,000 for pitching and $1000 for pinch-hitting.

"I haven't changed my mind a bit since the last time I talked with the Colonel—which was some time back," Ruffing growled. "I want to play ball, but if $1000 can keep me out, I'll stay out."

Ruffing said he had gone to no bother about making plans for the summer, provided he and the Yankees remain apart on the $1000 point. He owns an apartment building and plans to devote his time to managing it.

Col. Ruppert's remark that Ruffind would get no pay until he reached perfect pitching condition caused the burly redhead to snort that "the Colonel is taking something for granted."

"That sounds as though he was sure I'd sign at his figure," Red sputtered. "He's taking that for granted. I say right now that if I am 'docked' it will be at $16,000 a season—not $15,000."

The hurler said he is "not very far out of condition and could be ready to go by the start of the season."

HORNSBY'S TEAM GETS FOUR HITS OFF KELLEY

Blake and Van Atta Hit Hard — Philadelphia Pitcher Goes Full Route at Top Speed.

By John E. Wray.
Sports Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., April 3.—LOST—Six or eight batting eyes belonging to the Browns' murderers' row. Finder will be liberally rewarded by returning same to Rogers Hornsby.

The optics disappeared at Tech Field here this afternoon in the second game between the Athletics and the St. Louisans with the result that the A's blanked the Browns 10 to 0.

Very, Very Helpless.

Hornsby's men have never appeared so helpless as they did against the hurling of right-hander Harry Kelley, who went the entire nine innings, allowing only four hits. Manager Hornsby's double went for one, Bottomley and Hemsley each singled and Bell scratched an infield tap to complete the inglorious batting of the St. Louisans.

The showing of some of our sluggers was pitiful and no fewer than four times in the first six innings did the Brownies hit into double plays to end what scoring hopes developed. Vosmik twice disappointed in this manner. Manager Hornsby contributed one and Huffman, a pinch-hitter, contributed still another.

Only once did the Browns appear to have a real scoring chance. That came in the second inning with one down. Hornsby then hit the deep center field fence with a drive and Bottomley hit a single to follow him. Hornsby stopped at third. Clift then popped a foul to the catcher. Kelley filled the bases with a pass. But Sheriff Blake, although he drove out a long fly, could not score a runner.

Throughout the game the Browns popped up weak flies or foozled little taps to the infield.

Sheriff Blake, who started on the hill for the Browns, looked good for three innings. He let the enemy down with two singles and no runs and appeared set to pitch a good game.

The Firing Begins.

A tiring arm and some bad luck contributed to an avalanche which overcame him and netted the Athletics six runs and six hits.

Blake started the fall by walking Werber. Moses then laid down a bunt along the third base line with Werber in full motion. Clift and Blake scrambled for the ball but Blake's throw was late. Moses was safe and, in the meantime, Werber scooted all the way to third.

Johnson then raised an easy pop fly just back of short but owing to the sun, in the eyes of Knickerbocker and Allen, who ran to make the catch, it dropped safe and Werber scored.

Dean singled through the box, scoring Moses. It appeared as though Blake had regained his poise when he forced Hayes to hit into a double play, but the Athletics, in hitting stride, kept right on swatting. Newsome doubled, Blake walked Parker, the pitcher doubled and Finney singled to complete the slaughter and put the game on ice, before Blake finally checked the agony.

Homer for Johnson.

But the Athletics were not yet done with Blake and in the fifth inning Johnson hit a terrific drive which cleared the center field fence and hit the roof of the club house beyond, carrying more than 400 feet. Blake stopped the A's thereafter.

Van Atta, who succeeded him, showed nothing and was rapped for three runs, due to three hits and a pair of bases on balls. He was taken out in the seventh and Kimberlin finished, holding the tired but happy Athletics to one hit and no runs.

Youngsters to Pitch.

Tomorrow is another day and the Mackmen will again be the Browns' opponents. His veterans having failed him on the mound, Hornsby plans to use his young pitchers, Bonetti and Walkup, in the final game of the A's series.

Manager Earle Mack indicated that Caster will be his pitcher tomorrow. The attendance was 1019.

Satisfied With Blake.

"I'm satisfied with the pitching of Sheriff Blake. He showed me some good curves and control," said Manager Hornsby after today's defeat. Instead of seven runs, only two should have been scored on him in five innings. Clift should have been in on Moses bunt with one on in the fourth inning. Knickerbocker should have caught John-

CHICAGO, April 3.—Despite the fact that there is some question about the fitness of Billy Gonsalves, chief goal getter, the Shamrock soccer club of St. Louis is confident that it will overcome the rough, tough Sparta club here tomorrow afternoon and advance to the two-game final series for the national soccer championship and the Dewar Cup.

At St. Louis two weeks ago, the Shamrocks won the first game of the Western final series, 3 goals to 1. A heavy snow here last weekend caused a postponement of the second and concluding game, giving the injured Gonsalves a welcome rest. He probably would have been of little service had the game been played a week ago, but he said tonight that he feels strong enough to start and he hopes to go the full distance of 90 minutes. His injury has been diagnosed as a pulled muscle in the right side of the abdomen.

Kane Would Play Center.

Manager McNab has a definite plan in mind to meet the emergency should Gonsalves have to quit the field. Eddie Kane would be inserted at center forward and Werner Nilsen would become the inside right. Kane, a vigorous young giant, gave the Chicago backs a lot of trouble when he was dropped into the game for a final 10 minutes, two weeks ago. Nilsen, over a period of years of league and cup matches, has proved himself a very useful inside forward. The Shamrocks would unquestionably miss Gonsalves, as would any team in the country, but they are confident they can beat Sparta even with reserves in the lineup.

Both teams are expected to settle down to a smarter style of football as a result of their experience in the first match. The Shamrocks, for example, say they will tie a rope to Jimmy Wolf, the speedy outside left, who scored Sparta's only goal, and they hope to find a way to keep the ball away from Baba Vicek, clever inside left, who does most of the scheming and play making for Sparta.

Total Goals Decide Series.

Sparta has mopped up on all opposition in the Chicago district this season and fans here believe the team has an excellent chance of overcoming the St. Louis team's two-goal advantage. Total goals decide the issue in this series as well as in the national cup final. The Shamrocks are inclined to believe that they have the edge on the New York Americans, Eastern champions, but they have a real job on their hands here before they gain the right to tackle the Americans.

A victory here would run the Shamrocks' string to 22 straight. They have not lost a game since the Philadelphia German-Americans defeated them a year ago in the national cup final, nor have they been held to a tie score. A tie tomorrow would win the series for St. Louis. Sparta, to win the Western title, would have to beat the Shamrocks in the ratio of 3 goals to 0.

The weather outlook is bad, but every effort will be made to play the game.

Final Series Opens in West.

The opening game of the national final series will be played in either St. Louis or Chicago and the second game in New York, it was announced by Phil A. Riley, treasurer of the Shamrocks. Originally, the series was scheduled to open in the East but the postponement of last Sunday's game made it advisable to open in the West to avoid a conflict with major league baseball.

Danny Farrar Upset in National College Boxing

By the Associated Press.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., April 3.—Battering his opponent with heavy body blows, Roy Petragallo of Washington State College became the 1937 National Collegiate 115-pound boxing champion tonight. He won a 3-round decision over Frank Jenkins of South Carolina.

The bout called for a hair-line decision, with the judges favoring Petragallo.

The decision met with a round of boos.

A capacity crowd of more than 5000 fans turned out for the final scramble of leather mittens.

Carl Eckstrom of North Dakota captured the 125-pound crown with a decision over Paul Waller of Washington State after a slam-bang battle.

Eckstrom floored Waller with a right to the jaw in the opening session and held an edge in the second round. Waller's two-fisted attack won him the final round but he could not overcome the North Dakotan's margin.

Southpaw Ben Alperstein of Maryland outpunched and outfought Bob Bates of Washington State most of the way to win the 135-pound championship.

In the first big upset Rolly Shumway, University of Idaho, battered out a decision over the 1936 national 145-pound champion, Danny Farrar of Duke.

Farrar, a left-hander of real punching ability and stamina, was no match for the Idahoan, who scored with a dozen rights to the jaw in the last round.

Rangy Ed McKinnon of Washington State, Pacific Coast champion, won the 155-pound title with a hard-earned victory over Steve Wilkerson of University of Mississippi.

Outstanding star of Duke delegation, Ray Matulewicz captured 165-pound laurels with a one-sided victory over Max Novich of North Carolina.

Louis Schmidt of the University of Virginia slugged out a decision over Cameron Gamble of Tulane in the 175-pound finals.

Chasing his opponent all over the ring and scoring repeatedly with rights to the jaw, Harry Mullins of Mississippi State defeated Don Walker of San Jose (Cal.) State College to win the heavyweight championship.

Golf Caddies March Out in Strike and March Back Again

By the Associated Press.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., April 3.

A STRIKE by 150 caddies at the Chickasa Golf Club lasted 30 minutes today.

At exactly noon, the caddies walked out of the "bull-pen" and demanded 75 cents for 18 holes, instead of 60 cents.

In a body they headed down the road. Then, they split up into two groups to guard both entrances to the club.

At 12:30 p. m., Chairman Joe Hill of the club's Caddies' Committee told them their demands were met.

They returned to work.

JOE PLATAK IS HANDBALL KING FOR 3RD TIME

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, April 3.—Joe Platak "stole the show" in the finals of the National A. A. U. Handball Championships today.

The speedy Chicago postoffice clerk captured his third consecutive singles title by defeating Sam Atcheson of Memphis, Tenn., a former champion, 21-13, 21-6, and then teamed with Bob Weiller to win the doubles crown from the defending titleholders, Joe Gordon and Andy Berry, of Los Angeles, 21-14, 21-12.

Platak, a natural left-hand shot, who developed a great drive with his right hand after years of practice, was too fast and too strong for Atcheson. Time after time he choked off rallies by the Southern ace, whose experience from years of tournament play did not match the Chicagoan's agility and stamina.

The victory placed Platak's name in the record books as the third player ever to win three straight national singles championships.

Victory in the doubles was "sweet revenge" for Platak and Weiller, who last year were runners-up to Gordon and Berry for top pair honors. Weiller, also of Chicago, played a steady game, but it was Platak's ability to make numerous "kill" shots with both hands that defeated the West Coast team.

Jack Schwartz of Washington, D. C., won third place in the singles by defeating Jack Srenco of St. Louis, 21-12, 19-21, 21-20, while third place in the doubles went to Frank Coyle and Ed Linz of New York, who defeated Joe Goldsmith and Lloyd McGinnis of Long Beach, Cal., 21-12, 21-5.

HAWAIIANS IN A. A. U. JUNIOR BOXING MEET

Nine districts of the national amateur athletic union are expected to be represented in the national junior boxing tournament at the Auditorium Tuesday and Wednesday evenings.

It will be the first time the event has been held here although the senior tournament was held in this city two years in succession.

Balked in their efforts to land the senior for this year, officials of the Ozark A. A. U., the local district, accepted the junior which is fought along the same lines as the senior and every boxer is eligible for both events, except that those who have won senior championships may not enter the junior. Of course, the minor tournament doesn't attract the entries nor the attention that the big event, which is to be held this month in Boston, does.

Among the entrants will be teams from Hawaii and the Indian School at Chilocco, Ok. The Hawaiians are on their way to the senior event, ten strong, but only about half the number are expected to engage in the tournament here.

The Ozark team will have a strong representation and upon their showing in the junior will depend the chances of several of the boys to be sent to Boston for the senior.

Among those from this district are Al Beauhuld, a welterweight, brother of Billy Beauhuld, who is hammering out a fine reputation for himself in the professional lightweight ranks.

Another is Frank Sidlow, a clever middleweight. Most of the boys won championships in the recent District Golden Gloves tournament.

Last year Quincy Troupe, St. Louis Negro heavyweight, won the title in that division of the Junior, which was held in Providence, R. I.

ST. LOUIS MAY BE IN MIDWEST PROFESSIONAL FOOTBALL CIRCUIT

Bud Yates, who has operated professional football teams here in several seasons for ten years, departed last night for Cincinnati to attend a meeting today of the Midwest Football League, expecting to return with a membership for St. Louis, in that organization.

Six teams—two in Cincinnati and one each in Dayton and Columbus, O., and Louisville and Indianapolis—made up the circuit last season, Yates said, and St. Louis and Chicago are expected to be added for the 1937 campaign.

Yates declined to name any associates in the promotion and said he had not lined up any players or a coach as yet.

SIX RIDERS THROWN, ONE HORSE KILLED IN STEEPLECHASE RACE

BALTIMORE, April 3. — Miss Superior, an eight-year-old bay mare owned and riden by Norman Baetjer Jr., won the junior cross-country steeplechase today in as breath-taking a contest as the six-year-old race has ever seen.

Six riders were thrown and one horse was killed in the challenging two-and-a-half mile test on the estate of J. W. Y. Martin in Worthington Valley. None of the riders was hurt, although several fell heavily.

BILLY BEAUHULD SIGNS TO FIGHT JOEY ALCANTER HERE APRIL 20

By W. J. McGoogan

Billy Beauhuld, St. Louis lightweight, who sought and found a measure of fame in the boxing rings of New York and New Jersey after he won the national amateur championship here in 1934, will return to his home town for his third contest here since turning professional on April 20.

Beauhuld has been signed to box Joe Alcanter, Kansas City Mexican, in a 10-round engagement at the Coliseum on that date by Jack Callahan, matchmaker for the Navy Post.

In more than 30 fights since he has entered the money ranks, Beauhuld has been undefeated. He has met some of the really good boys of the East and has either won from them or earned draws.

A recent engagement with Aldo Spoldi resulted in a draw decision. Spoldi later met and lost a 10-round decision to Henry Armstrong but some of the critics who saw both contests thought that Beauhuld had given Spoldi a more severe drubbing than did Armstrong.

Likely to Box Armstrong.

In two matches here, Billy defeated Lorenzo Lovings, Chicago Negro, and fought a draw with Davey Abad.

Among other contests, Billy has defeated such men as Orville Drouilliard, Joe Boscerino, Joe Guggino, Ray Sharkey and Phil Baker. He fought a draw with Lew Feldman, veteran New Yorker, which really opened the eyes of the East to Bill's prowess.

Since then it is undestood he has been taken under the wing of Madison Square Garden's management and has agreed to box exclusively for the Garden. It is likely that he will box Armstrong there in the near future.

Alcanter is a rugged, aggressive type of fighter who has appeared here several times. He fought and defeated Joe Ghnouly twice last year, fought a draw with Everett Rightmire and suffered a technical knockout at the hands of Armstrong last November in a bout in which Alcanter suffered a cracked jaw bone and was out of the ring for some time.

Callahan says he will announce several other contests for a card in the near future.

Another Chance for Parks?

Larry Atkins, matchmaker for the Fred W. Stockham Post of the American Legion, was not at all discouraged over the program he presented at the Auditorium Friday night, although the fans showed their disgust for the so-called feature event by walking out in large numbers from the second round on.

Atkins declared yesterday that the evening was a financial success and that he thought Donald "Reds" Barry displayed more courage than many other boxers who have fought John Henry Lewis.

Atkins said he would offer another show the latter part of the month if he can secure the services of some of the men with whom he is negotiating.

He intimated that he thought Joe Parks deserved another chance, despite his knockout at the hands of Honeyboy Jones, which Atkins attributed to the fact that Parks held Jones too cheaply and didn't train properly.

Armstrong is another who may be seen here shortly.

No definite order has been issued regarding mixed bouts, but it is understood that the promoters will be told on the quiet to limit the number of such contests to one on a card.

ATTEMPT TO CHANGE SITE OF CUP PLAY FAILS AT MEETING

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 3. — Samuel Collom's attempt to have voided the award of the North American Zone Davis Cup finals to the West Side Tennis Club at Forest Hills, failed at a meeting of the executive committee of the United States Lawn Tennis Association today.

After a two-hour discussion which developed considerable heated debate, Holcombe Ward, president of the U. S. L. T. A., declared the movement led by Collom was "out of order." He pointed out that the award of the finals to Forest Hills had been made by the Davis Cup Committee and that the executive committee was without power to make any change.

The finals, probably pitting the United States against Australia, are set for May 29-30-31.

Mickey Cochrane and Joe Cronin have placed a ban on wives at training camps. Always somebody taking the joy out of wife.

A T training camps some people say
(While in the meantime knocking wood)
That when the better half's away
The other half is twice as good.

Life on the Bench.

ALAS, alack! for Gehrig's stand-in,
He has no chance to get his hand in;
Although to play he simply itches,
On the benches he wears out his breeches.

For him no plaudits of the bleachers,
No double play he ever features.
Except when up as a pinch hitter
He's busy as a flagpole sitter.

As long as Lou is hale and hearty
Babe's not the life of Ruppert's party;
And while the boss may rate him highly
He liveth not the life of Riley.

Sounds Silly.

The Legislatures of the various states may enact laws defining the maximum amount that fight promoters may charge for the boxing shows but until they make a law compelling you to pay it why worry?

When they start talking about a maximum price for a suit of clothes, or a sirloin steak, we'll prick up our ears and begin to take notice.

Inasmuch as box fights are not listed among the essentials or necessities of life we hold that it is the inalienable right of the captains of the cauliflower industry to write their own price tags and let the consumer take it or leave it.

And as these gents whose life's work is parting the fool from his money with the least possible delay, always have their hand on the public pulse and ultimately in the public purse, you can trust them to judge to the nicety of a gnat's eyebrow when the saturation point has been reached.

SO do not let the prices stop
The battle or delay it;
E'en though it be a hundred "top"
You're not compelled to pay it.

Strange, isn't it, that Ty Cobb, generally accepted as one of the greatest, if not the greatest player of all time, was just another ball player when he got in a world series. In that one respect Babe Ruth had it all over him, as shining in the annual classic was Babe's specialty.

Will the St. Louis fans ever forget Babe's three homers in one game and his snaring a foul fly out of the left field boxes for the final putout of the series? Will the Chicago fans ever forget the day he called his shot and dropped the pill into the bleachers at the exact spot where he had indicated it was going to land?

And Babe did it the easy way. It isn't of record that he ever had a fight with a spectator or another ball player in his life.

But they say that Ty has mellowed with the passing years and is living the life of a country squire in California. In his early 50's Ty is going around in the lower 80's.

Grant Extended in Semifinal of Atlanta Tennis

By the Associated Press.

ATLANTA, April 3.—Persistent little Bryan (Bitsy) Grant Jr., vest-pocket tennis ace, was extended to over-come an off-day and a good opponent for a berth in the Atlanta invitation final today.

Getting off to a bad start against Joel Hunt of Los Angeles, Grant quickly dropped two sets but he steadied down and finally defeated his opponent, 3—6, 6—8, 6—2, 10—8, 7—5.

Grant, who ranks No. 3 nationally, had trouble controlling his shots today while Hunt, ranking No. 9, was apparently on top of his game until the fifth set when he got a cramp in his leg. Hunt was laid out on the court twice in the fifth set by this cramp and continued play with great physical difficulty.

Tomorrow Grant will play for the title against Wayne Sabin of Hollywood, Cal., seventeenth ranking player nationally, who upset Bobby Riggs of Los Angeles, and ranked No. 4 nationally, yesterday.

Grant went back into action a little later with Wayne Sabin as a partner to finish up a doubles semi-finals begun yesterday. Grant and Sabin defeated Martin Buxby of Miami and Elwood Cooke of Portland, Ore., 8—6, 10—8, 6—3.

Pevely Five Wins.

The Pevely Dairy Negro basketball team won the final game of the Pine Street Y. M. C. A. League last night from the Argus five, 23 to 19. Brooks of Argus and Rhodes of Pevely were high scorers with eight points each.

DOWNTOWN "Y" WINS NATIONAL JUNIOR WATER POLO TOURNEY

A long-passing attack in which they fed the ball to Ed Schroeder for three straight goals in the second half game the Downtown Y. M. C. A. swimmmers their second junior national water polo championship in a row last night, as the "Y" boys defeated University of Illinois' team in the tournament final, 5 to 3.

Illinois opened the scoring and gained a 2-0 lead on shots by Norm Lewis and John Varable. But Johnny Bruen counted two markers to tie the score at halftime.

In the second half the "Y" players began shooting long passes to Schroeder, a tall, strong left forward, who stayed near the goal and flipped three shots in the cage. Lewis added Illinois' third goal later in the second period.

Downtown "Y" sent in two substitutes. Jerry Dunajick went in for his brother, Lado, and Douglas Phillips took the place of Wilbur Olsen, who had suffered a broken toe in an earlier tournament game, but continued to play in the final for a while.

The new championship team is a different one from that which won the 1936 junior tournament for the Downtown "Y." Title winners in a junior meet are eligible only for senior competition.

The Illinois team won second place in the tournament by defeating the Hoosier A. C., 4 to 2, after the latter team had eliminated the St. Louis Juniors, 8 to 7. These were special consolation round games following the final.

Second honors went to Shazwonz Gypsy, owned and handled by E. Monroe Osborne of East Hampton, L. I.; third, to Chesscroft, owned by Arthur A. Bliss of Weatherly, L. I., and handled by Lionel Bond, and fourth, to champion Sodaks Gypsy Prince, also owned by Bliss and handled by Bond.

STAGS FAVORED OVER IMPROVED ST. EDWARDS IN TITLE CONTEST

By Reno Hahn.

The Stags are favored to win the Municipal Soccer championship this afternoon in a fourth-round game with the St. Edwards club at Fairgrounds Park, starting at 3 o'clock. A preliminary game between the Nebco's and the Columbus Square Pleasure Club will begin at 1:45 o'clock.

The Stags are undefeated in two games, while the St. Edwards team has dropped one decision while winning two. Under the system being used this season, two defeats are necessary to eliminate a team from title play, so St. Edwards must win two straight games from the strong Stag eleven, while the Stags need but one victory.

The teams have not met this season. Each club won from the Andy Fredricks, 3-2. St. Edwards, in two games with the Schumachers, lost, 2-0, and won, 2-1, while the Stags blanked the Schumachers, 2-0.

St. Edwards Improved.

St. Edwards has improved greatly in its play since it dropped the opener to the Schumachers. After that scoreless game in which it passed up many scoring chances, it tallied five goals in the next two contests.

E. Jamieson, center forward; Hohman, outside right, and Maurice Kramer, right halfback, have done the scoring. Jamieson is the most dangerous, having counted three clean goals.

The Stags, with veterans studded throughout the lineup, had an easy time in stopping the Schumachers' attack, while carelessness against the intermediate champion, Frederick team, allowed it to tally twice.

Changes in Stag Lineup.

Two changes will be made in the Stags' lineup, with Seneca Nolan switching from center halfback to J. Macken's place at right halfback, and Macken going to his old position at center. The other change will have John Ikemeyer starting at outside left. Ikemeyer's work in the Stags' victory over the Schumachers was one of the highlights of the game. He went in at the start of the second half and immediately the Stags began to "click."

St. Edwards will use the same lineup which proved so effective against the Schumachers.

COLLEGIANS SET SEVERAL NEW RECORDS IN TEXAS RELAYS

VENZKE LOSES IN MILE RACE; DRAKE WINNER AT TWO MILES

Don Lash of Indiana Runs the 3000-Meter Distance in 8:37 — Number of Olympic Team Members Compete.

AUSTIN, Tex., April 3.—Several new records were hung up today for future collegians to shoot at as teams from all over the nation, including a number of Olympic entries, competed in the tenth running of the Texas Relays.

Sam Francis of Nebraska heaved the shot for a new record of 51 feet 11¾ inches.

Vickery of Texas leaped 6 feet 7 inches in the high jump, and Don Lash of Indiana recorded an 8:37 mark for the 3000-meter run.

Other records were:

A throw of 219 feet 8½ inches by Alton Terry of Hardin-Simmons, Texas Olympic entry.

Michigan State's 4 minutes 36.2 seconds run of the mile relay.

Drake's team record of 7:47.6 in the two-mile relay.

The 120-yard hurdle mark in the junior divisions by Wolcott of Rice who stepped it in 14.3, as good as his seniors.

A jump of 6.2 by Haese of Lavernia, Tex., for the high school high jump mark.

In the sprint medley, North Texas Teachers' 3:31.9 was a new mark.

Crowds cheered when Blaine Rideout, North Texas distance runner, led Gene Venzke, Pennsylvania's late great miler, home in the not too sensational time of 4 minutes 20 seconds. Blaine's twin brother, Wayne, entered by special permission against Don Lash in the 3000-meter but was not eligible to win—even if he could.

They say the Rideout boys run all day long, just for the fun of it.

Detroit Man Is Winner of Badminton Title

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, April 3.—Walter Kramer of Detroit won the men's singles title of the first national badminton tournament before 3000 fans at the Illinois Naval Armory tonight, defeating Hock Sim Ong of Berkeley, Cal., 15—10, 15—4.

The women's singles championship was captured by Mrs. Del Barkhuff of Seattle, Wash., who defeated Mrs. Ray Bergman of Westport, Conn., 11—4, 11—1. Kramer, 23-year-old ace who has been regarded as the nation's top ranking player, and Mrs. Barkhuff were standout pre-tourney favorites.

Ong, a Chinese student at the University of California, gave Kramer a battle in the first set, but the Detroit ace was much more steady and accurate in the final engagement.

Mrs. Barkhuff teamed with Zoe Smith, also of Seattle, to win the women's doubles crown from Mrs. Bergman and Helen Gibson, of Westport, Conn., 15—6, 4—15, 15—7.

BILLIKENS GET EVEN BREAK IN DOUBLEHEADER

Winning the second game by a score of 7 to 3 after losing the first by an 8-3 count, the St. Louis University baseball team yesterday broke even in its doubleheader with Illinois State Normal U.

In the opener, each team used a pair of pitchers. The first battle was close until the ninth inning when the Billiken hurler, Carl Yates, was driven to cover by a five-run barrage by the Illinois batsmen. The score was tied at 2-2 until the seventh and the Illinois team had only a one-run lead going into the final frame. Then, they became acquainted with what Yates was serving up and his collapse followed.

Normal used three hurlers in the second contest, but their batsmen were unable to equal those of the Billikens. Normal was away to a 2-0 lead with single runs in the first and fourth frames, but the Billikens tied it in their half of the fourth and went ahead with two more in the fifth and three in the seventh. Normal manufactured a single run in the ninth.

Both games were long, the first consuming two hours and 30 minutes and the second 10 minutes more than two hours.

Drone and Ryan led the Billikens with two hits apiece in the opener and Mudd gathered a pair in the second contest.

The unlucky Mel McGonnigle, who was hurt and out of action after having played nine minutes of the 1936 football season, yesterday was spiked in the left foot in the second inning of the second game.

New York Rangers To Play Detroit In Hockey Series

By the Associated Press.

MONTREAL, April 3.—The New York Rangers charged into the final round of the National Hockey League playoffs for the Stanley Cup, world championship emblem, by whipping the Montreal Maroons 4 to 0 tonight. It was the fourth straight playoff victory for the Rangers and their second over the Maroons. New York will oppose the Detroit Red Wings in the final series beginning Tuesday at New York.

The Rangers, who finished third in the league's American Division during the regular season, eliminated the other third place outfit, Toronto, in two straight games. They defeated the Maroons 1-0 at New York Thursday then completed the rout of the Montrealers with a 3-goal rally in the second period tonight.

The Maroons had eliminated the Boston Bruins in the second-place series to enter the semi-final.

Detroit, winner of the league title and the Stanley Cup a year ago, successfully defended the first crown by defeating the Montreal Canadiens in three out of five games between the divisional leaders. The Stanley Cup final also will be played on a three-out-of-five basis with only the first game on the Rangers Madison Square Garden rink.

less ones as soon as possible to save them from unnecessary expense. But at best it takes five or six days before we can say that a man has no chance to advance. And by that time it has cost him some money.

"However, now and then we run into a smart guy who won't admit he's licked and then we get a laugh out of it. We had one lad of this kind, so he says we'll hear from him later some day.

"WE told him to go home, that he would save money and be better off in some other profession. He wanted to be a pitcher, but he could hardly throw a baseball across the street. And he paid his own expenses all the way from Jersey City.

"'You dumb clucks,' he told us when we gave him the bad news, 'you certainly are boobing things up for your new owners. You say I'll never do. Well, I want to tell you that you'll be sending me a wire some day and offering $50,000 for me.'

"You know that's the kind of a rookie I like. I don't have to shed tears about him. Either he's a Dizzy Dean and can make good his boast, or he's an egg and we can be hard-boiled with him."

Big Business.

THE Browns are going into this baseball business big. That is to say, the farming angle has jumped into full operation, within a few months.

The Laredo camp will filter out enough acceptable recruits to make up half a dozen teams. At Meridian, Miss., Jack Fournier and his associates will look over 200 more prospects. The Browns have 14 minor league affiliations and most of them depend on the St. Louis center to send them material.

The club's activity in the farm angle of baseball is really remarkable, since from one farm club the new owners have lines out with as many bush outfits as almost any major league outfit.

Whether this activity will be productive to the extent of developing real stars quickly remains to be seen. Naturally, with the pick of more than a dozen teams, something favorable is bound to result, sooner or later.

In the meantime the new owners are hoping it will be "sooner."

Not So Mercenary.

BASEBALL, once called a sport, is supposed to be highly mercenary today. Just a matter of profit and loss, with the stockholders moaning when there are no dividends, just like in business.

President Don Barnes of the Browns contends that this view is not justified in the case of several major league clubs, in particular the Browns. He observed:

"Just look us over. Look at the names of our principal subscribers. You will find that none of them has invested more than what might be called pin money, for men of their means. Then there are some 900 others who bought small holdings of stock because they were interested in seeing a successful Browns team.

"Of course all of us would be interested in seeing investments prosper. Even the five dollar fellows are human to that extent. But I firmly believe that not one person interested financially in the St. Louis American League club is so financially concerned that he is worried about whether his stock goes up in value or not.

"We are all in it because we wanted to see a winner instead of a loser representing the American League in St. Louis. And I think the club, if it improves its standing next season, will please those who are interested in the team more than a declaration of dividends.

"There isn't one of those who subscribed money to buy the club who need be concerned whether he wins or loses, beyond the natural feeling of all of us that we don't like to back a loser. And for that reason we are starting the season under conditions which will make for a maximum of interest and a minimum of complaint.

"Give us some good pitching and there will be no ground for complaint. I think we'll get it."

That's fine, Don. We hope you do get it. If you ask us, we'll say we feel sure that the pitching will be better than last year. That's because it could hardly be worse.

ROLLER DERBY TO FINISH TONIGHT

The Roller Derby, a three-week roller skating marathon, will come to an end at the Coliseum tonight. The King-Aronson team held a one-lap lead on the field of eight teams last night, having covered 2043 miles, and six laps. The Runne-Pierz pair was a close second with the same mileage and five laps. Both had one point earned from the sprints.

By Harold Tuthill.

The local collegiate football season is over—that is, until Sept. 10. Washington University's Bears put the finishing touches on their spring training program yesterday afternoon at Francis Field with the Greens defeating the Reds, 19 to 0.

The score meant little to Head Coach Jimmy Conzelman and Assistants Gale Bullman and Percy Gill except to prove that the players could cross the goal line. What they were most interested in was to see whether the freshmen of 1936 could fit in with the leftovers of last fall's varsity squad. The frosh did, but the work of both squads was not as polished as it might have been. Timing and precision was lacking except on occasions when a play clicked, thereby demonstrating that the Bears have the ability. Whether they will perform as a machine next fall is something else again.

A New System.

Probably a contributing factor to the Bears' raggedness was the fact that a new system is being introduced and it's up to the veterans as well as the newcomers to get the swing of Conzelman's "hodge-podge" as he calls it. The Bears now go into their huddle with the line formed as it will play, the backfield about a yard behind the line and facing the opposition. The quarterback kneels in the center of the group and calls the signal. Then the line does an about face, moves up to the scrimmage mark and the backfield assumes a box position, counting all the while. The backs shift and the ball is snapped, and the play is on its way. It's a tricky formation and if everybody does his part, will gain many yards for the Bears.

The "hodge-podge" retains much of the razzle-dazzle that was an outgrowth of the Warner system used on the Hilltop the last few years. The flea-flicker play is still in evidence and was responsible for the first two touchdowns yesterday. Both times, Buckin' Joe Bukant, who has been moved from fullback to halfback, lateralled to Left End Bob Hayes for scores in the second period. Once the ball was on the 13-yard line and the other time it was on the Reds' 47-yard mark. After the first counter, Norman Tomlinson tried to add the extra point, missed and was given another chance when the Reds were offside. He missed again. Jack Warner made his place-kick good after the second touchdown.

Shakofsky Scores.

In the third period, Leo Shakofsky, graduate of the 1936 class at University City High School, ran from his own 43-yard line to the Reds' 10-yard mark where he was caught by Harvey. After Warner bucked the line twice to move the ball up to the one-foot line, Shakofsky dived over the pile-up for the score. Warner's try for the extra point was blocked by Center Charley Gould.

And just to prove that the actual score meant nothing to the coaches, the game was permitted to run past regulation time during which Dick Yore ran over the goal line and Warner kicked the extra point. So, if you were one of the 500-odd persons in the stands yesterday the score was NOT 26-0, because officially Yore's tally did not count.

How's this for inconsistency? A week ago when the mercury was at the freezing point the Bears played a baseball game. Yesterday, when the players felt as though the thermometer had reached the boiling point, they played football.

"Why, it must be 250 degrees out there," one footballer moaned. And from the looks of his perspiring brow and wringing jersey, he was almost evidence of that.

Conzelman praised the work of Sophomores-to-be Jack Warner, Bob Hayes and Ralph McKelvey. The last two are ends, a much-needed asset in the plans for a heavy passing attack. If they can hang on to Bukant's bullet passes, everything will be rosy.

We might add that Veterans Libero Bertagnoli, Tomlinson and Gould did not do so badly on line play, while Bukant and Bob Minkey of the backfield lettermen, had anything but a poor day.

Bill Ferfecky, halfback, dislocated his left elbow early in the contest and had to retire. Charley Gould, Reds' center, was kicked in the groin, but returned to the battle after a second-quarter rest.

Feller Case Echo.

TOM YAWKEY, whose Boston American League operations prove that he is a good sportsman, must smile whenever anybody mentions Bob Feller, the spectacular young strikeout artist of the Cleveland Indians.

Last fall Yawkey and his general manager, Eddie Collins, were prepared to fly from Boston to a ranch in Wyoming for an extended hunting trip. They discussed the club affairs as they waited for plane time and the subject of the Feller case arose. So Yawkey put in a long-distance call for Billy Evans, now affiliated with the Yawkey organization.

Yawkey explained that there was a possibility that the Feller case might be decided by Commissioner Landis during their absence and as on the ranch they would be out of touch with telegraph companies, they wanted to be sure that their interests were protected in case the young man happened to be declared a free agent.

How much, in Evans' opinion, was Feller worth? Evans replied that he wouldn't give a cent more than $50,000 and stated his reasons. However, the generous Yawkey instructed Bill to go as high as $100,000, as the Boston club would be very happy to add Feller to the pitching staff.

Evans replied that he had given his opinion, on Yawkey's request, and that he still thought $50,000 was as high as they should go, but that he'd take orders. He wanted it remembered, however, that $50,000 would represent his judgment and the other $50,000 would be on Yawkey's responsibility.

They Talked It Over.

THE same evening Evans got another telephone call. Yawkey explained he and Collins were on their way and that they had talked the Feller case over some more. He was calling from a landing field en route and he and Collins had decided to take the rubber band off the bank roll. Evans was to forget about the $100,000 limit and get Feller no matter what it cost, if Landis declared the boy a free agent.

There was still another phone call. Yawkey and Collins were about to start the last leg of their flight to the ranch and they had continued their discussion of the Feller case. Evans was told that not only was there to be no rubber band whatsoever on the Red Sox bank roll, but every precaution must be taken to see that Boston got Feller. Evans had better get in touch with Bib Falk, Boston scout, and send him to Van Meter.

And so Falk, armed with numerous certified checks with which to raise and raise and raise the ants, went to Van Meter, the little Iowa village near the Feller farm. He stayed there six weeks with all his checks and that's the story that makes Yawkey smile rather sheepishly whenever anybody mentions Robert William Feller.

Redbird Hash.

BOB WEILAND, the tall left-hander, who worked as a draughtsman before turning to baseball pitching, collects pipes as a hobby. He has bought one or more in every city he has ever visited and his collection fills many shelves in his Chicago home. Joe Medwick is a beginner at pipe collecting, but is off to a good start.

Mickey Owen moved in as a member of Pepper Martin's quartet shortly after he arrived in camp, but he changes key too frequently and Pepper has asked for waivers on the young catcher. He may get another chance since Johnny Rizzo has been sent to the minors. Mickey thinks he's a baritone. . . . If training camp hotels continue to display slot machines to take money from the players, something will have to be done for the rookie players. They were taken for a ride at Daytona Beach. . . . Surely, they ought to know better, but they don't. . . . Incidentally, the players are beginning to think they ought to be paid for spring training time, even if the pay is only a nominal amount. . . . It costs something to pay tips and take care of laundry bills and other incidentals. Many of the players had to stay at the hotel, several miles from town, many weary evenings because they had no car-fare or picture show money. The veterans, of course, have dough, but a minor leaguer can't save much out of $50 a month for six months. Or should he?

CARDINALS WILL TEST NEW LINEUP IN GAME WITH ROCHESTER

a try, in the hope that the changes will help us to present our strongest possible front. If I can't make it, then we'll try something else."

To Play Rochester.

Dizzy Dean, Jim Winford and Ira Smith were scheduled to work against the Tigers today, but with Rochester as opposition tomorrow, Jerome Herman probably will be excused, with Winford and Smith dividing the assignment.

The next game with major league opponents will be at Orlando Monday, when the Cards meet the Senators in the fourth game of the series. The Cardinals, who have won only three of 12 games with major league teams, will be trying for their first 1937 decision over Bucky Harris' club.

NEW YORK WRITER TELLS OF HIS RUN-IN WITH THE CARDINALS

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 3.—In the final edition of today's New York Daily News, Jack Miley, sports writer, gave this version of the "Battle of Tampa" in which he and Irving Kupcinet of the Chicago Daily Times suffered some injury in a fight with members of the St. Louis Cardinals:

Mrs. Dizzy Dean said before the ball game: "If I find that Miley, it will go hard with him." She found Miley.

Not only that, Dizzy found Miley. "Is your name Miley?" he said in the crowded lobby of the Tampa Terrace. "Yes," I replied.

He conferred with his wife. They rode up in the elevator and came back. Then he squawked, "I wish you would not write those things about me." He was assured that on his earned run average he was just another pitcher. "You said some terrible things about me," Dizzy complained.

Those were the only serious casualties of the day.

Jones Klein, man of many positions, probably will stick with the fullback job.

Since the Billikens completed their spring work last Sunday, football will be relegated into the background until Labor day when the boys start drifting in from their summer vacations.

Bob Hayes and Tom Hayes are both ends and both will be sophomores in the fall, but they are not related to each other, according to Conzelman.

RICHARDS RIDES CALUMET DICK TO VICTORY AT BOWIE

HEAVILY-PLAYED ARAHO ENTRY TWO-THREE IN HANDICAP RACE

Smart Handling by Jockey Gives Calumet Dick Five Length Advantage at Finish.

By the Associated Press.

BOWIE, Md., April 3.—E. H. Bryson's Calumet Dick, a successful campaigner at New Orleans, received a fine ride by Harry Richards to defeat Mrs. Walter O'Hara's combination of New Deal and Mucho Gusto in the mile and 70 yards of the Bowie Handicap today.

The Araho stable entry of Mucho Gusto and New Deal, one-three in the Rowe Memorial Handicap Thursday, was favored by the crowd of 20,000, but when it came to the running neither was a match for the five-year-old son of Gallant Fox. Calumet Dick did not lack for support, however, as he paid $5.30 for $2.

Held Back Early.

Richard's ride was a big factor in Calumet Dick's victory. While Mucho Gusto and Weston were running the first six furlongs in 1:13 3-5, the best time of the meeting, he held the Bryson ace back.

As the leaders swung wide at the stretch turn, Richards shot his mount through on the rail, emerging in front for the run to the judges. From there on it was a breeze for Calumet Dick as he galloped home five lengths in front of New Deal. Mucho Gusto was only a nose back in a photo finish.

Departed, at a $21.60 mutuel, defeated the favored Dormido by a half length in the seventh race. Rollick was third in the mile and a furlong test.

The total mutuel play for the day was $435,337 as compared with $377,739 on the first Saturday last year.

Flying Dere, a popular mare with Maryland bettors, brought Jockey Jackie Westrope his second winner of the day and her backers an $8.50 mutuel in the fourth race. Over a mile and 70-yard route, Flying Dere defeated Kindred Spirit by two lengths. Irish Vote salvaged the third money in the group of seven.

Major Upset by Heartease.

Heartease, one of the horses sponged here last fall, caused a major upset in the running of the third race. The By-Pass II filly, property of Mrs. D. K. Kerr, forged to the front soon after the break and bounded to the wire a length in front of the favored Wise Bun. Third money went to Sun Abbot. Heartease paid $39.50, the longest price of the present meeting.

Little Argo, owned by Mrs. W. H. Denham of Washington, D. C., led from flag-fall to finish in the six-furlong sprint of the second race. The winner was two and a half lengths ahead of Zebulo, the heavily-played choice, at the end with Scatter Brain a length and a half farther back.

Sceneshifter Is Heavily Played In Future Book

Heaviest play of the past week in James J. Carroll's future book on the Kentucky Derby was sent in on Sceneshifter, which is trained by former Jockey Earl Sande. The play on this son of Sickle, which finished a very strong third in the Bahama Handicap at Hialeah, February 6, knocked his price down from 60 to 20 to 1.

Other horses that have received more than normal play at this stage are C. V. Whitney's Ptolemy and Warren Wright's Galsun.

EMPTY BOTTLE WINS A CLOSE RACE IN TEXAS

By the Associated Press.

ARLINGTON DOWNS, Tex., April 3.—Empty Bottle, Mrs. E. B. Carpenter's four-year-old colt, won a photograph finish with The Fighter, Milky Way entry, to take the featured fifth race before a crowd of 10,000 here today.

Empty Bottle, rushing to the front early, responded well to strong urging in the stretch, and gamely beat off the closing rush of The Fighter.

The Fighter was held off the pace by Jockey Albert Robertson the first five-sixteenths, "lugged in" badly in the stretch, came fast when straightened, and would have been up in another stride.

Boston Sound, owned by C. E. Davison, held on well in the drive but could do no better than one length behind the two leaders.

Empty Bottle, co-favorite, ran the six furlongs in 1:13 and paid $7, $3.40 and $3.40. The Fighter paid $3.30 and $3, Boston Sound $4.

LOWEST PRICE FOR TITLE GO WILL BE $3.30

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, April 3.—James J. Braddock, with Manager Joe Gould, traveled nearly 300 miles by motor today inspecting prospective training camp sites near Chicago preparatory to the world heavyweight champion's departure tomorrow for the Wisconsin northwoods.

No definite selection was made of the spot where Braddock will do his boxing for his title bout with Bomber Joe Louis June 22. Instead, Manager Gould will remain in Chicago to make a further inspection while the titleholder heads north for his conditioning camp at a private estate on Lake Sissabagama six miles from Stone Lake, Wis., 420 miles north of Chicago.

Champion Is Happy.

Happy that he has a fight in sight at last, Braddock is anxious to tsart his five weeks of roughing campaign. Although his plans do not call for boxing, he is taking along two sparmates, Charley Massera and Jack McCarthy, and Trainer Doc Robb Lippman. The champion probably will not get into his boxing program until he comes to his camp close to Chicago in May.

Manager Gould intends to have Braddock's sparring partners pursue the same routine that the champion does so they will be well conditioned helpmates when the real training begins.

Mike Jacobs, who holds a long-term contract on Louis' services and who will be associated with Joe Foley in promotion of the Comiskey Park bout, left for New York today after closing radio contract details and discussing seating plans for the contest. He plans to return within 10 days.

Prices Approved.

Promoter Foley announced the Illinois State Athletic Commission had approved the intermediate prices for the championship affair. With ringside seats selling for $27.50, the prices will be scaled down to $3.30 for the lowest price seats. Intermediate seats will sell for $5, $11 and $16.50, including tax.

BERNARD F. DEFEATS PAR TO WIN TROPICAL PARK STAKE

JOCKEY WRIGHT GETS MOUNT OFF IN FRONT TO BEAT FAVORITE

Le Blanc, Up on Final Race Winner, Captures Riding Honors for the Meeting From Wright.

By the Associated Press.

CORAL GABLES, Fla., April 3.—I. J. Collins' Bernard F. won a photo decision today in the $5000 Tropical Special, closing feature of Florida's most successful racing season since the sport was legalized in 1931.

A crowd of 18,000 saw Bernard F., off in front, withstand the favored Par's challenge to win by a neck in the mile and a furlong race for three-year-olds. Maecloud finished third with Robber Baron completing the small field.

Veteran Jockey Wayne D. Wright rode the winner, which paid $13.30 to win and earned $3800 for his owner. He ran the distance in 1:51.

A victory in the final race gave Hubert Le Blanc, New Orleans apprentice, riding honors at the Tropical Park meeting. Le Blanc, who scored with Pay Wrack in the nightcap after taking the second with Bristle, finished the meeting with 25 victories, one more than Wright. First place carried with it a $500 gold watch.

Hirsch Jacobs, Brooklyn trainer, defeated George Alexandra of J. E. Smallman's Canadian-owned stable, 15 victories to 12 for the $500 gold watch awarded to the leading trainer.

Refund of $2.80, Then $18.60.

The Congrave Stable's Dark War, a seven-year-old daughter of Traumer, was a handy winner of the first race. Breaking on top, Dark War was never headed, finishing two lengths in front of P. F. Ratti's Romney Royal. Regula Baddun was third.

The winner was a heavy public choice and paid $2.80 in the mutuels.

A surprise victory marked the running of the second contest when E. T. Burke's Bristle, a long shot, was an easy winner, finishing six lengths in front of the Medway Stable's El Bandido. Out Of Step, the favorite, was third. Bristle, paying an $18.60 mutuel and with Le Blanc in the saddle, ran the six furlongs in the good time of 1:11 4/5.

Three in Row for Marson.

Journey On, a three-year-old son of Challenger II, and carrying the Branncastle Farm's silks, took the third race. Friedberg & Axton's Tobacco Buyer took the place award, a neck behind the winner. Phillips' Pete was third.

Mrs. F. Rossiter's Marson, son of Misstep, made it three in a row in a stirring nose finish in the six-furlong class "C" Handicap for three-year-olds, fourth on the card. Joyride and Black River, which finished second and third, respectively, lay lapped on the winner at the finish.

SOCCER CHAMPIONSHIP AT STAKE TODAY IN U. CITY MUNY LEAGUE

An opportunity to clinch the Municipal Soccer League championship of University City confronts the Zeltman club this afternoon as it faces the Wahoo Indians at Heman Park on Olive street road. The Zeltmans, winners of the first half season pennant, have a one-point lead over the Indians and a victory today would definitely settle the issue. Should the Indians win, a play-off of first and second-half champions would follow.

Play today starts at 2:30 p. m. with Andy Meagher and Les Slattery officiating.

CENTRAL ROWING CLUB IN NEED OF OARSMEN

The Central Rowing Club has issued its annual call for new oarsmen, Captain Lee Henderson, who will coach the crews, announced yesterday. Central plans to enter both the Central States Rowing Regatta and the national event, as well as the local affairs.

Central's veterans began training last Sunday. Newcomers between the ages of 18 and 25 are especially urged to try out for the crews. Athletes as light as 145 pounds can be used in the various crews. Those interested in rowing should visit the club at the foot of Angelica street, 4100 north, and ask for Henderson. Workouts are held during the week at 6 p. m. and Sunday mornings about 9 o'clock.

TENNIS OFFICIALS TO FORM ORGANIZATION

A number of tennis umpire chapters will be organized in the Missouri Valley territory this year, according to Dr. Frank E. Diekneite, president of the Valley body. The chapters will furnish umpires and linesmen for the various sanctioned tournaments.

William F. Luther, veteran Tulsa, Ok., official and Davison Obear of this city, who were recently appointed members of the National Tennis Umpires Committee will be in charge of arrangements for organizing the umpires chapters, Diekneite said.

Those who wish to volunteer their services may write to the Missouri Valley Tennis Association, 622 Boatsmen's Bank Building, St. Louis, for further particulars.

Despite the fact that the season is closed on bass, crappie, jack salmon and goggle-eye for the next nine weeks, there is still plenty of good fishing available in Missouri. The trout must still be on his guard because the season extends until October 31, from March 1. Likewise, channel catfish are legally taken until June 1. Rough or non-game fish may be taken without violation of any game law.

Poachers Beware!

During this period of closed season when the fish are raising their young, they should be absolutely protected. Not only is it the duty of the law enforcement agencies to do their best against poachers, but it is the duty of every real sportsman to call attention of the laws and purposes to all fellow fishermen and if there are some in the crowd who persist in violating rules, as there often are, the only thing to do is to report the offense to the authorities. The laws have a purpose and for the good of future sport they must be enforced.

Blue-Gills.

From the Missouri Game and Fish Department comes the glad tidings that the blue-gill is not a game fish so far as a creel limit is concerned, but anglers may not commercialize this species. There is often a little hesitancy among law-abiding fishermen as to whether this fine pan fish is a game fish that can be taken, but Missouri Statute No. 8270 does not include this member of the sunfish family.

Worms and insects are the best natural bait for these fish, which rarely exceed eight inches in length or a quarter of a pound in weight. Although the experienced caster does not get the thrill from the smaller fish, catching it is much more sport than taking some others of the much larger size and for the young Izaak Walton, nothing is more sport.

The green sunfish or black perch is to the creeks and smaller rivers what a blue-gill is to lakes, ponds and larger rivers. It is the most common species of the family in creeks, being very voracious feeding on insects, night crawlers and small fish. It is very delectable as a pan fish and its great abundance in all Missouri streams make it a popular "camping" fish.

Worm-Bait and Rods.

Coincident with the receipt of several inquiries on what rods and tackle to use for worm fishing Breems Forrest, national authority on proper tackle equipment for all types of fishing, wrote an article for Hunting and Fishing which will answer most of the questions.

The first mistake made by the majority of early season worm fishermen lies in the selection of an old, discarded casting rod that is entirely too limber to be effectively used for worms. To get the best results from worms for trout it is necessary to fish upstream. It is also necessary to have full control over the rod at all times, this cannot be done if the rod is of light weight and lots of whip.

The ideal rod for the average worm fisherman should be nine feet long and weigh more than five and one-half ounces. It is even better to have a 10 or 11 foot pole. Such a rod does not give the same thrill in playing a fish that a light one does but the sport is centered around an extra long leader which makes a careful play necessary in order not to break the leader and lose Mr. Trout.

With a long rod it is easier to drop the hook and bait just where wanted and also to set the hook just as soon as the fish strikes.

Forrest ended with the thought that since a trout very rarely swallows a hook, always getting caught in the lip, the sporting thing to do is always to fish against the current rather than with it.

Dog Days.

The St. Clair County Pointer and Setter Club of Belleville, Ill., is holding its annual spring trials at the St. Libory course about 20 miles from Belleville today, after running off the puppy stakes yesterday. There are Derby and all-age divisions to close the third annual event. About 50 dogs were entered in the events, which will be judged by Asa Wallace and Dr. R. B. Rode of St. Louis.

Sportsman's Club.

That Southeastern Missouri sportsmen are very active is seen in the meeting set for April 18 at Dexter when a 17-county organization known as the "United Sportsmen of Southeast Missouri" will be perfected. This group, which is becoming more active and widespread each month, will federate with the Restoration and Conservation Federation of Missouri.

Kansas City Game Markets.

Harry Barmeier of St. Louis, United States Game Management Agent for Missouri, is on his toes for the Game and Fish Department, as is shown by a recent successful raid on market hunters for game and fish taken illegally in Missouri. State game wardens holding Federal Deputy commissions co-operated with Federal authorities in making arrests. Such institutions as the Salvation Army and other charitable organizations were the ones to reap an immediate profit, since the law requires that illegally taken game must be confiscated and turned over to such agencies.

Joe Werner on Skeet Board.

Secretary Henry E. Ahlen of the National Skeet Shooting Association announced last week that Joseph L. Werner of St. Louis had been appointed on the Skeet Advisory Council to represent Missouri in the problems of the flying clays. Werner was one of those most active in the National shoot held out at the Bridlespur range last fall and certainly should fill the position to which he was appointed along with representatives of 21 other states, who actively carry out skeet programs.

An important bill is at present in the United States Senate which will put a stop to stream pollution by various large industries which throw off the oily waste of their manufacturing into rivers and streams, causing the loss of many fish. Senator Lonergan introduced the bill last year but it was too late to act upon the measure. Sportsmen should watch with interest the progress of Bill S-13.

For repairing those torn and broken creels so the "big one won't get away," raffia is the ideal material to use instead of string, wire or leather thongs. Any florist can supply you with enough raffia to do the job for practically nothing and it will be a job well done.

Goodrich Co. Starts 'War on Unsafe Tires' at St. Louis Meeting

Aims of Campaign to Make Highways Safer Explained to Dealers.

Four hundred Goodrich dealers from St. Louis and surrounding territory in Missouri and Illinois met at the Elks Club, Monday for the launching of the Goodrich war on unsafe tires, set to begin Thursday.

This movement is designed to further the company's policy as a pioneer promoting safety on streets and highways for more than 20 years.

The dealers were welcomed by L. Sowers, district manager, who reviewed the company's promotion of safety. Ernest F. Jones, district sales promotion manager, explained the company's all-season, all-market 1937 advertising and sales promotion program, which includes a newspaper campaign even greater than the one the company used last year.

Hoyt Price, sales supervisor, discussed "army regulations" for the war on dangerous tires. He pointed out that national safety council's figures showed that more than 37,000 deaths were caused by motor vehicle accidents last year, while 1,300,000 injuries followed automobile accidents in the past 15 years, 500,000 Americans lost their lives in traffic accidents, and many of these were traceable to tire failures, principally blow-outs.

He also outlined various means by which streets and highways could be made safer.

Another talking motion picture, "Let's Try It," outlined sales possibilities for dealers.

District Manager Sowers said that Goodrich began its fork for highway safety when automobiles first came into use, by erecting signs on dangerous curves, at intersections and schools throughout the United States, some of which are still in service.

"In 1912," he said, "the company introduced a safety tread for automobiles designed to give road traction and prevent skidding.

"The Goodrich Silvertown Safety League was introduced in 1931, and more than 2,000,000 motorists have signed pledges to drive safely since then.

"Then came the Goodrich Life-Saver Golden Ply Tire to protect against blow-outs at high speeds, one of the real contributions of research and development in the tire industry.

"The movement to make American car owners tire conscious, and to remove hazardous tires from service, will be carried throughout the year."

At Sales Conference

D. E. Ahrens, general sales manager for Cadillac-La Salle, and other executives who attended a meeting of dealers and sales conference here Friday. Left to right: R. M. Jordan; R. L. Rickenbaugh, sales promotion manager; Rollen Travis, distributer at Peoria, Ill.; D. E. Ahrens; C. L. Alderson, distributer at Louisville; Frank J. Denny, advertising manager; A. A. Eiter and C. S. Cockrell, district managers; Guy Oliver, of the Oliver Cadillac, St. Louis distributer; George Mitchell, and E. W. Graulich, distributer at Evansville, Ind.

Cadillac-La Salle Sets Sales Record, Ahrens Tells Dealers

General Sales Manager Says Ground Lost During Strikes Is Virtually Regained.

There has been no development in the last six months to alter Cadillac-LaSalle's opinion that 1937 will be its biggest year, General Sales Manager D. E. Ahrens said on his arrival here Friday for a conference with dealers.

"Business has shown a decided improvement since the last sales trip I made before the introduction of our new models," Ahrens said. "Steel production, coal mining, power consumption, commodity prices—all of the factors that ultimately result in more automobile sales—have increased. I believe all lines of business can anticipate an unusually active spring."

Cadillac-LaSalle has made up most of the ground lost during the strikes.

"It would obviously be foolish for us to contend we did not lose a single sale due to the shortage of our dealer stocks in January and February. But the patience of buyers, once they made up their minds on the new car they wanted to drive, has been a surprising and gratifying expression of loyalty. Some of our customers waited two months for cars.

"Our own experience may or may not be typical of other companies. We do know, however, that our dealer orders continued to increase throughout the plant shutdown. We had on hand when we resumed production 13.3 per cent more orders than on Jan. 1.

"This steady business increase contributed to a record which is without precedent on our books. By the end of February, we had received at the factory more orders than were shipped of all of the 1936 series.

"At the same time retail sales disregarded manufacturing handicaps and ran up impressive toals. Retail deliveries in January were greater than in any like preceding month. Dealers also sold 20 per cent more cars in February than in the same month of 1936.

"Cadillac-LaSalle is rapidly filling in the gaps in stocks brought about by the interruption of assembly.

"The shortage in stocks was the only barrier to the best first quarter our dealers ever had. Invasion of the lower medium price field by the LaSalle V-8 met with wide public acceptance. Sales of the Cadillac V-8, V-12 and V-16 held a proportionate pace."

Accompanying Ahrens here were Frank J. Denney, advertising manager, and R. L. Rickenbaugh, sales promotion manager. Spring advertising plans, the most extensive in Cadillac-LaSalle history, were outlined at the meeting.

For Saving Gasoline.

One will save gasoline in his new car if he learns to use the accelerator gently. Pressing hard and suddenly on the pedal spurts gasoline into the combustion chamber in far too great quantity for effective use.

Proportion of Used Car Sales to Those of New Autos Rises

Change in Situation in Ten-Year Term Noted by Ford Manager in St. Louis.

A surprising increase in volume of used cars handled by automobile dealers has taken place in the last decade, according to M. N. Johnson, manager in St. Louis for the Ford Motor Co.

"Ten years ago for every two new automobiles sold the dealer handled one used car," said Johnson. "Today, for every two new cars sold, the dealer handles three or four used cars.

"Ten years ago the average value of used cars was $150 each; today the average value is $210, an increase of 40 per cent."

"These figures, compiled by the Ford Motor Co., indicate a much higher standard of value now available to used car buyers. Because improved economic conditions have increased the potential number of used car buyers, indications point to 1937 as one of the outstanding sales years in used car records.

"The average used car buyer is operating close to his personal financial budget. He demands a serviceable automobile. He insists on low original cost, and low maintenance and operating costs. He cannot afford constant repairs, low gasoline mileage or high oil consumption.

"For such buyers, the 1937 prospect is attractive. In the used car markets today, they can find a wide variety of used cars, priced within their budgets and conditioned for many thousands of miles of economical operation.

"Realizing the great number of used car prospects, the Ford Motor Co. is supporting its dealers in a nation-wide 'R and G' used car program.

"In co-operation with the factory, Ford dealers now may offer the buyers used cars which have been renewed and guaranteed to meet specifications fixed by the factory.

"This 'R and G' procedure developed by Ford enables Ford dealers to offer the used car buyer a written, money-back guarantee in which the buyer is protected to lengths previously unknown.

"Under the 'R and G' guarantee the buyer is assured that the car has been inspected thoroughly, and, where necessary, conditioned to meet fixed standards—with such protection, a buyer can select a used car with confidence; he knows that the car will perform as expected, and that he is fully protected.

"The Ford dealer can deliver almost any kind of automobile the used car buyer desires—in first-class condition, under the 'R and G' guarantee."

Graham Production on Profitable Basis

A profitable production of 7005 cars in the fourth quarter is the result of the first full quarter following completion of the program which concentrated all Graham-Paige manufacturing activities in the main plant at Detroit.

The company, according to its annual report just mailed, anticipated curtailment of production while the extensive work was proceeding. But annual savings estimated at $400,000 and a profit showing on 7005 cars, are the reported results of the concentration.

Watson to Manage Chevrolet Used Car Merchandising in Zone

E. R. Watson, Chevrolet's St. Louis assistant zone manager, has been promoted to the newly-created post of assistant St. Louis zone manager in charge of used car operations.

The appointment is one of 47 being made to fill corresponding positions throughout the company's 47 zones. It is part of developments in the recently-announced program whereby Chevrolet has set up a used car merchandising operation paralleling its handling of new cars and trucks.

Watson will work directly under W. V. Shell, St. Louis zone manager, and will have full charge of used car operations in the zone. He will have a complete staff exclusively for used car merchandising.

"The assistant zone manager appointments increase the company's used car personnel from a skeleton organization almost to full working force," W. E. Holler, Chevrolet's general sales manager, said. "When it actually begins to function according to the company's plan, it is expected to result in used car merchandising advances which will benefit company, dealer and public alike."

Says Developing of Highway Is Factor in Increasing Car Sales

"Statistics say that American motorists last year drove their cars 384 billion miles," says H. J. Klingler, general manager for Pontiac. "This mileage can be increased only by adding to the total number of cars in use in the country.

"But, to have any appreciable number, say five million more cars, registered, there must be a safe place for them to run. In other words, it will be difficult to step that 384-billion-mile figure up to say, 500 billion miles per year until more miles of safe and modern highways have been built where those extra 116 billion miles of travel can be run.

"The number of cars registered and the number of miles traveled each year have both paralleled the construction of new highways. And, of course, thousands of miles of improved highways are under construction continually."

"Gas" Consumption Increases.

Gasoline consumption in the United States in the first eight months of 1936 amounted to 12,807,349,000 gallons, an increase of 9.29 per cent over the 11,670,885,000 in the corresponding period of 1935.

Packard 'Ladies' Week' From April 5 to 17 All Over the Country

Throughout the whole country the period from April 5 to April 17 will be dedicated by the Packard Motor Car Co. to women as "Ladies week." Salesrooms are to be especially decorated.

"Ladies' week" was inaugurated by Packard a year ago. It proved so popular that this year the affair is being amplified considerably and the time has been extended to two weeks.

"Woman has long been recognized as a powerful influence in the selection of a new automobile," said G. M. Berry of the Berry Motor Car Co.

"Motor cars this year have many things to claim the interest of the women. They are easier to drive, are far more comfortable and quiet and certainly more beautiful than ever. Men owe women a debt for the influence they have had on motor car design, and perhaps this was never more true than of the automobiles of 1937."

Few Cars Made in 1895.

American automotive factories produced only 300 cars in 1895.

Auto Prize Package of Mechanical History, C. L. McCuen Says

The automobile today stands unchallenged as the prize package of all mechanical history, C. L. McCuen, general manager of Oldsmobile, declares.

"Ever since the first commercially successful automobile was built by Oldsmobile 40 years ago, the spread between price paid and value received has steadily widened in favor of the purchaser. This has been achieved largely through the engineering of the men who design automobiles."

McCuen cited the rise in value for Oldsmobile buyers within the last six years. Since 1932, he said, the prices of both the six and eight have decreased by approximately $165, representing a drop of 7½ cents per pound of car to a new low of between 23½ and 25 cents per pound.

"During that period the weight and wheelbase of both cars have been substantially increased," he said. "The horsepower of the six has been advanced from 74 to 95, and of the eight from 87 to 110."

Nash Car Deliveries at Retail Show Gain

"Retail deliveries of Nash cars in March were greater than in any month since 1929, and two and one-half times as great as those in March a year ago. March production of Nash cars was double that in March, 1936. Nash 1937 registrations, according to latest figures in Automotive Daily News, are twice those of the same period a year ago," C. H. Bliss, vice-president of sales of Nash Motors, said the past week.

"Not since 1929 have we had any month in which as many Nash-built cars have been delivered by our dealers as in this one.

"Retail sales in the first three months of 1937, the reports revealed, are 150 per cent greater than in the same period a year ago.

"Production continues at capacity at all three of our plants."

WADE CHILDRESS BUYS APARTMENT IN MOORLANDS

Purchases Recently Completed Structure at 7544-48 York Drive at Reported Price of $100,000.

RIDGETOP GROUND FIGURES IN DEAL

Bids Being Taken for Two 18 Unit Fireproof Structures Designed for Sites on Westwood.

By Berry Moore.

L. Wade Childress, president of the Columbia Terminals, Inc., has been disclosed as the purchaser of the modernistic apartment building recently completed at 7544-46-48 York drive in Blue Ridge Terrace, Moorlands addition. The structure occupies a site 130 by 125 feet.

The purchase, now in contract form, is scheduled to be concluded this week, as was told in last Sunday's Post-Dispatch. While not verified, the price involved was reported as approximating $100,000.

The building is three stories in height and of fireproof construction. It contains five 12-room apartments, with an array of modern appliances. Ample garage space is provided in the basement.

The structure was promoted by Anton H. Klauber, real estate agent and operator, and erected by the Fred Ahlemeier Building Co., the seller. The J. R. Van Raalte Mortgage Co. financed the project.

Buys Ridgetop Lots.

The Ahlemeier Building Co. coincidentally purchased from Childress 100 lots, or approximately 10,000 front feet in Ridgetop on the south side of Clayton road, east of McKnight road, with an ambitious building program. The announced purchase price was $100,000.

The lots obviously were given in exchange for the Moorlands apartment. Negotiations were handled by Klauber.

The Colonial residences of L. Wade Childress and Wade T. Childress stand on adjoining tracts on Clayton road, west of the North and South road.

The purchaser has plans for improving the lots with houses ranging in cost from $20,000 to $25,000. Construction is to be launched as soon as the title to the property has been conveyed.

Ridgetop is a high-class residential development of approximately 22 acres, laid out by Childress 12 or 15 years ago. The subdivision comprises 39 lots with a uniform frontage of 100 feet. An appreciable number of lots was purchased in 1928 by the United Investment Corporation, composed of Louis H. Waltke, president; Paul Jones Jr., vice-president; A. W. Ridgely Young, secretary; Robert H. Waltke, treasurer, and Walter H. Kroehnke, assistant treasurer. Approximately 13 houses have been erected in the development and several are in course of construction.

The lots involved in the present transaction represented the last of the remaining unsold ground owned by Childress in Ridgetop.

78-Acre Tract Bought.

Ridgetop is just west of a 78-acre tract on the south side of Clayton road about 1000 feet west of North and South road, acquired in June by a syndicate sponsored by W. A. Federer, president of the Federer Realty Co. and a director in the St. Louis Real Estate Exchange. This tract was owned by the Clayton Road Realty Co., organized about 20 years ago by W. K. Bixby, J. H. Walker, N. A. McMillan and Thomas West and others. The Pitzman Co. of Surveyors & Engineers has been commissioned to convert the tract acquired by the Federer syndicate into a residential park on a scale commensurate with the location. The residence of Firmin V. Desloge occupies a plot in this tract.

Plans have been drawn and bids are being received for the erection of two 18-unit fireproof apartment buildings on the west side of Westwood drive between Buckingham and Oxford drive in Blue Ridge Terrace. Lichtenstein Estates, Inc., is the builder and Ben Shapiro is the architect.

The twin structures will be three stories in height and will comprise four and five-room apartments. Labor-saving devices and modern appliances will be on a comprehensive scale, with no innovation omitted. Basements will be equipped with modern laundry facilities, including electric ironers and washers.

Negotiations for the sites have been concluded and construction is to be started as soon as working plans are available. The two projects will involve an outlay exceeding $250,000, exclusive of the cost of the sites, it is understood.

Lichtenstein Estate, Inc., recently completed two 18-unit three-story fireproof structures, one on the north side of Buron place, the other on the south side of Parkdale, east of Westwood drive, in Blue Ridge Terrace, at a reported total cost of $240,000. Both projects were financed by the General American Insurance Co., represented by M. H. Rodemyer & Co.

Westwood, a north and south street in Blue Ridge Terrace, extends from Wydown boulevard on the north to Clayton road on the south. It virtually forms the west boundary of Moorlands addition, comprising what is known as Blue Ridge Terrace.

Incidentally, Lichtenstein Estate, Inc., has acquired a long lease on the entire eighth floor of the Columbia Building at the southeast corner of Eighth and Locust streets for its downtown offices. The lease was arranged by the Henry R. Weisels Co., representing Sidney Schoenberg, owner of the building.

ACQUIRES TRACT ON LADUE ROAD FOR DEVELOPMENT

A 10-acre tract on Ladue road, overlooking the St. Louis Country Club grounds, has been purchased by Dale S. Stanza, secretary and treasurer of Stanza & Co., Inc., with development plans. It has a frontage of 300 feet on Ladue with a depth of approximately 1320 feet. The B. H. Stoltman Real Estate Co. handled the transaction.

The tract is to be subdivided into five homesites of two acres each, under the supervision of the Pitzman Company, surveyors and engineers. A large outlay has been made for improvements, which will include an ornamental stone entrance, roadways and landscaping. The work will be executed under the supervision of Hugo K. Graf, architect.

H. H. Temm Realty & Investment Co. was the former owner of the ground.

Residences Recently Acquired

Former residence of James M. Carpenter at 4450 Westminster place, recently purchased by James K. Vardamann Jr., president of the Tower Grove Bank and Trust Company. Albert T. and Whitelaw Terry handled the transaction.

Residence at 123 Peeke avenue, Kirkwood, recently acquired by X. Cain from Frederick Betts. Cornet & Zeibig were the agents in the transaction.

CONWAY ROAD TRACT BOUGHT BY P. J. DAHL

Textile Head Buys 35 Acres at Corner of Mason for Home.

A 35-acre tract at the northwest corner of Conway and Mason roads, owned by the Schnaar estate, has been acquired by Phil J. Dahl, president of the Western Textile Co. The transaction was handled by Mary Potter Love, Inc.

The purchaser has plans for the erection of a handsome residence. The site having an extensive frontage on both highways will be landscaped and otherwise enhanced.

The purchase price was not announced. The old Schnaar homestead embracing 10 acres of ground at the corner of the tract was not included in the transaction.

Mary Potter Love, Inc. recently effected the sale of a 16-acre tract at the northwest corner of Conway and Mason roads, to a client with plans for its improvement.

This firm also reports having concluded negotiations on behalf of clients for several other properties in St. Louis County, including six acres in Overland, adjacent to the Log Cabin and Bogey Clubs, an old residence with seven acres of ground in Kirkwood, and a number of building sites in the Ladue district.

MRS. LAWLER TO REPRESENT BAKEWELL IN ST. CHARLES

Edward L. Bakewell, realtor, has appointed Mrs. Edward K. Lawler of 407 South Sixth street, St. Charles, Mo., to handle the sale of residences in St. Charles and residences, farms and duck shooting grounds in St. Charles County.

Bakewell has been active in the real estate field both in St. Louis and St. Louis County for the last 28 years or more, handling making loans, leases, appraisals and sales of all types of property. The firm is opening a county branch at 7720 Forsythe boulevard, Clayton, to facilitate the sale of residences, acres and farm properties in St. Louis County.

WESTMORELAND AVENUE HOME ACQUIRED BY D. G. BERGLUND

The residence at 7632 Westmoreland avenue has been acquired by M. Dalmar G. Berglund of the Leschen Rope Company. It was owned by Dr. M. Leon.

A living room, dining room, library, kitchen comprise the first floor, and 4 bedrooms, 2 baths, the second floor.

SKINKER-DELMAR CORNER DEVELOPMENT IS PLANNED

Three-Story Semi-Business Structure Has Been Designed for the Northeast Section.

S. D. Rossi, Inc., with offices at 601 Skinker boulevard, has asked for bids for the construction of a modern three-story semi-business building, designed for the northeast corner of Delmar and Skinker boulevards. The bids will determine the cost of the project.

The first floor of the structure will contain 10 stores and the second and third floors, 36 apartments. Construction will be fireproof. The equipment will include every modern facility. The site has a frontage of 60 feet on Delmar and 155 feet on Skinker. It was formerly occupied as a filling station.

S. D. Rossi, Inc., owns the northwest corner of Delmar and Skinker boulevards, improved with one-story business buildings. The site has an extensive frontage on both thoroughfares.

Mrs. Ira E. Wight of 42 Westmoreland place owns the three-story business block at the southwest corner of Delmar and Skinker boulevards. She purchased it a year or so ago from a bank which had acquired it under a loan. The building, comprising seven stores and five apartments, has been revamped and brought up to date with the installation of the latest appliances.

Made at the instance of Williams-McCree, Inc., mortgage bankers, the purchase was predicated primarily on the value of this site, which has a frontage of 106 feet on Delmar and 120 feet on Skinker.

It is recalled in that it focused renewed attention on this part of the city as an investment center. Several attractive offers have been declined for the corner which commands one of the most imbportant intersections in this part of the city. Management of the building is under Cornet & Zeibig.

Substantial buildings also occupy the southeast corner of Delmar and Skinker boulevard. The south side of Delmar extending east from Skinker is one solid phalanx of business buildings.

Extension of Skinker boulevard, which terminated at Delmar, through to Olive Street road, has had a rejuvenating effect upon this part of the city. The Delmar passenger station of the Wabash Railway, at Delmar boulevard and Hodiamont avenue is pointed to as another factor.

Mentioned among others recently completed on west Delmar, is the new branch and office structure of the Chapman Bros. Dyeing & Cleaning Co., standing on the site on the south side of the boulevard west of Hamilton avenue, formerly occupied by the old Park Theater. Another recently completed building is that occupied by Wearens Food Shop, Inc., at 5977 Delmar. This structure, modernistic in design, was erected and is owned by R. A. and G. B. Bullock.

Construction has been started on a three-story combination business and apartment building of attractive design at the southwest corner of Forsythe boulevard and Northmoor way in Clayton. This project, involving approximately $100,000, is being financed by the Edward K. Love Realty Co. S. E. Peiersen is the builder.

The first floor will comprise three stores, and the upper floors 17 apartments. Each apartment will contain six rooms and two baths. The building will be air-conditioned and equipped with every modern appliance. The site has a frontage of 60 feet on Forsythe, with a depth of 150 on Northmoor.

All the stores in the Forsythe boulevard project were leased from the plans before excavation was started, noteworthy as indicating the demand for modern quarters in this area. The building is being erected as a speculative investment.

An Attractive Home Design With Floor Plans and Home Building Suggestions Appear On Page Two of This Section

A Brick Cottage in the Colonial Manner

Built of Sand Lime Brick It Includes All That Makes Possible Simple Informal Country Living.

Courtesy O. HORACE TUCKER Architect Member Amer. Inst. of Architects.

THE small house that is built for country living has problems that are different from those of the house in town. Where the city dweller is concerned with compactness and good circulation, meaning the access to all rooms on one floor as well as to the front door, the country dweller need not concern himself with these. The housewife makes comparatively few trips to the front door from the kitchen when she is occupied, and the fact that she is passing through the living-room need not irk her. The living problem is very simple in the country where neighbors think nothing of tapping at the back door rather than ringing the front door bell.

The one-story cottage shown here is under construction at High Ridge, Mo. It represents simple living for two people and an occasional week-end guest or two. The construction is brick and siding and the brick is a sand-lime unit which is not fired as is the clay brick that most of us know. It is compressed and cured under steam pressure and emerges a creamy white. The foundation is of concrete blocks with waterproofed exterior. Siding in the gables is painted white, shutters are green and the roof is of asphalt shingles to harmonize with the general color scheme.

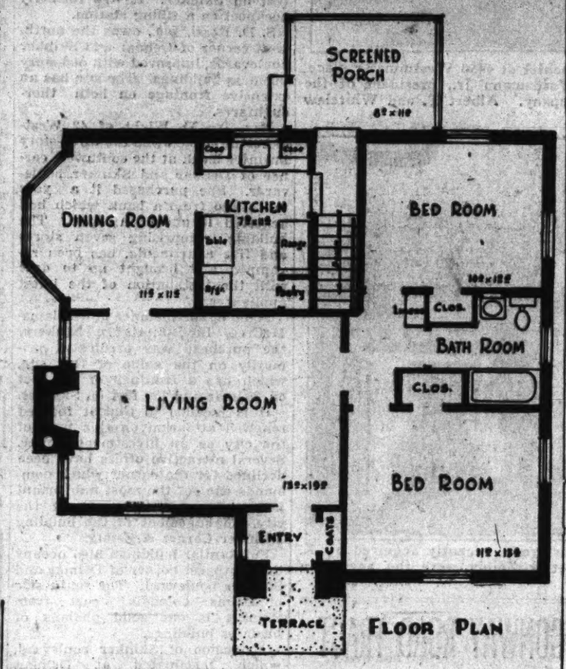
Since one enters directly into the living-room, the architect has planned a sizable entry with large coat closet. Hall space, which is not necessary, owing to the fact that the upper portion of the house is used only for storage, has been added to the living-room, making it well proportioned. The fireplace at the north end of this room has a circulating device which makes it possible to heat this portion of the house on cool days without using the warm-air heating plant in the basement.

THE dining room has a large bay which looks out over this very beautiful portion of Missouri landscape. The window in the east wall here has been omitted purposely to give more wall space for furniture placing. In fact, fenestration has been planned throughout to accommodate the owners' furniture. The kitchen has a double drain board sink with cabinet space above and below. Wainscoting is of asbestos tile. The kitchen is to be a complete electric kitchen. The screened porch, which is accessible from the rear entry, may be used for dining when the weather permits.

The two bedrooms with shared bath face south and should be comfortable no matter what the weather, since the house is completely insulated. The linen closet is just outside the bathroom door.

An artesian well with a pump adjacent to the house furnishes the water. Sewage disposal is made through a septic tank with outlet into a distant field.

Plaster in all rooms has been tinted and the wood trim is painted white. The oak floors are to be stained and waxed. Louvres in the attic are purely decorative and furnish ventilation. The architect, O. H. Tucker, who is a member of the St. Louis chapter, American Institute of Architects, has estimated the cubage of the house at 22,500 feet, at a cost of 25 cents per cubic foot.



FLOOR PLAN

QUESTIONS BEFORE THE HOUSE

Q. I have just had a brick house remodeled and find that the walls are terribly damp. In fact, the new wallpaper has become badly stained and in places has come loose. In doing the alteration I had to have a new roof put on, and the house was well soaked while the roof was off. Do you suppose this is the cause of the wet walls?

J. C.

A. It undoubtedly has something to do with it; in fact, it may be the major cause. Run your furnace for a week or two and see if the walls do not dry out. If you have replastered the house, especially if the plaster was placed directly on the brick walls, it will take several months for the plaster to dry out thoroughly, even without the additional moisture that may be in the walls from the soaking they got. You had better strip off the paper and wait before repapering until all signs of moisture have disappeared. When you feel quite sure it is entirely dry, wait another month and then redecorate; to do it before that is to invite trouble.

Q. I am about to build a house, and the plans show a closet in the center of the first floor for the gas furnace. Shouldn't this have a vent to the outside. C. T. M.

A. Such a vent is required by law in many communities and should be installed whether so called for or not. It need not be a large vent; perhaps a 6-inch pipe would be sufficient, depending upon the size of the heater.

Q. I notice so many houses built nowadays without any front porch. Are front porches out of style.

MRS. ANNA R.

A. Many have porches or terraces in the rear overlooking a lawn or garden. Front porches are little used any more because of the lack of privacy from automobile traffic and because they keep out the sunlight during the long winter months.

Q. Are built-in incinerators practical for a private house? S. K.

A. Yes; they are. There are two types: Those that use no fuel other than house trash and those that are gas fired. Be sure to locate yours in such a position that the prevailing wind will carry the fumes away from the house, as there is apt to be a slight odor from it.

Q. Some years ago I purchased a low piece of land and have allowed dumping of metallic junk and clean fill. I now want to build a home. Can I build on top of this fill? M. F.

A. It is advisable to build upon solid earth, hence you should have your cellar dug and extend your foundation well down to solid bearing. If a cellar is not contemplated, it is possible to level the fill and pour a reinforced concrete mat properly designed and construct the house upon this mat. To consult a competent architect or engineer on such a particular problem is advisable.

Q. My home is only 15 years old, and it has been necessary for me to replace some of my mechanical equipment. Is this reasonable?

JAMES L.

A. It must be remembered, in regard to such equipment, that the first cost is rarely, if ever, the last cost—a thing which is particularly true of equipment which contains moving parts. Consequently, when choosing equipment, the items of repair, operating cost and the probable length of service before replacement must be considered.

Q. The air from the vent pipe of my gas heater blows the flame out whenever there is a north or east wind. What can I do to stop this?

THOS. C. B.

A. You will most likely find that the vent pipe above the roof is too short. It should extend two feet above the highest point of your roof.

Q. I have a one-and-a-half-story house. Without going to the expense of insulating, how can I make the second-floor space more cool in the summer? LOUIS R.

A. Provide large louvers in each gable end of the roof to circulate the air in the space between the ceiling and the roof. On hip roofs provide louver dormers. The louvers should be built as high as possible.

SOUND INSULATION POSSIBLE NOW

Insulating materials are made for two purposes: To prevent heat penetration and to stop sound. Insulation against heat is widely used in all kinds of buildings, and few buildings are now built without some insulation of this sort.

Insulation against sound, however, is confined at the present time generally to commercial buildings, retail stores, hotels, and public buildings. Sound insulation and acoustical treatments should not be confused. Sound insulation stops the transmission of sound from one room to another, while acoustical treatment is used to break up the reflected sound waves within a room itself to prevent echoes. There are some materials that serve both purposes.

Insulation against sound penetration may be placed within the wall structure or it may be applied as a wall or ceiling finish. Many of the insulating wallboards are now made for acoustical work that insulates against sound transmission as well. The make-up of the material itself cuts down the penetration of sound and the surface finish prevents the reflection of sound.

Window Draperies

Window draperies, allowed to hang in straight folds without tiebacks, and without a valance, will make the window seem higher than it is. This is an excellent treatment for windows which appear low and too wide. If the window is too high and narrow, hang the draperies so they cover the woodwork and extend beyond it and hang a deep valance over them.

FOR BETTER LIVING

Seven out of every 10 property owners neglect their roofs and court trouble by risking large repair bills, according to housing experts. If your roof is the built-up type, you will be wise to have it examined now that winter is past. It is very important to have the bituminous outer coating renewed before the felt begins to rot. Bituminous coatings may also be used to extend the life of sheet metal roofing.

In a stair that turns a corner, winding steps are perfectly easy and safe if only two are set in a 90-degree turn. Such steps allow ample foot space where one normally steps. To divide this 90-degrees into three steps makes unsafe footing.

Tests made at the University of Michigan disclose the fact that radiators coated with bronze lose 25 per cent in efficiency, while oil paints or enamel do not retard normal radiation. Radiators finished with bronze may be restored to normal efficiency simply by adding an oil-paint coating. Radiators painted to match walls are less conspicuous and more in harmony with surroundings.

In the newly constructed houses radiation is hidden as much as possible. In the modernization of dwellings an effort is made to conceal existing radiators. This may be done by covering them with benches, or adding shelves at the top or on either side.

Shutters have long been used on the outside of the house to relieve plainness or as a protection against sun. They are now employed in the interior to serve various decorative and useful purposes. Taking the place of French doors or archways, they are picturesque either open or closed. They may be used as a covering for built-in bookcases.

For kitchen cabinets they afford ventilation and provide an artistic effect. Matching woodwork, they may be hung in frames at windows.

According to Real Estate & Building Management, corrosion destroys steel, cast iron, wrought iron, and alloys to the amount of $100,000,000 annually in the United States. Annual replacement exceeds $27,000,000. Moisture, gases, and chemicals hasten corrosion, and electrolysis is a large factor. Buried pipes show largest deterioration, especially where covered by soil. Protective methods are valuable and should be used as extensively as possible.

In constructing homes this important matter should be borne in mind and necessary measures taken to give adequate protection to the piping and other metals used.

In cleaning enamel and porcelain bathroom articles, be careful not to use too strong a solution of cleansing material. One cause of difficulty in removing water stains from some tubs may be found in the fact that the finish has been partially removed by too severe cleaning. In most cases a mild cleanser applied on a soft cloth will be as effective as is necessary.

With casement windows that are not provided with special screens, the type of screen that rolls up is convenient. These screens need be raised only sufficient to get at the adjusters and fasteners when operating the casement, and they do not interfere with draperies.

SPRAY FRUIT TREES NOW TO SAVE CROP

Orchardists should warm up the spray machine motors and get spray equipment ready for the annual late winter bath for all fruit trees.

This late winter spraying of twigs, limbs and tree trunks is the first of a series of treatments applied by fruit growers during the year to combat insects and diseases that annually threaten the fruit crop.

Either a lime-sulfur spray with nicotine sulfate, or a lubricating oil emulsion with nicotine sulfate may be used. The oil emulsion spray, whether commercial or home-made, is safest when applied before the buds burst, and will control scale insects, mites, bud moth and some aphids. The lime-sulfur sprays diluted one part of the concentrate to eight parts of water with a pint of nicotine sulfate to each 100 gallons of the diluted spray, will control aphis better when applied as a delayed dormant spray and will also clean up scale infestations.

How to Apply Varnish

Use a brush two inches wide when applying varnish to the average surface. Always work with a full brush, aiming to spread the varnish as freely as possible without its running or sagging. When varnishing a floor, brush with the grain of the wood, covering about four or five boards for a distance of about four feet. Then, without filling the brush, "cross off" the surface to catch any places missed. After that, scrape the brush over the edge of the can and lightly "straighten out" the surface, brushing lengthwise again. This brushing in three directions spreads the varnish to a uniform full film without danger of runs.

Water Tight Roof

The roof, being the most exposed part of a building, should receive close scrutiny. Leaks menace plaster and paint in rooms and halls below. Water-soaked ceilings become dangerous to occupants and may cause serious damage to the property. Assurance of a water-tight roof is necessary to the owner of a new modernized home.

Redecoration of Home First Sign of Spring

Walls Set Color Keynote —Slip Covers Add Note of Freshness to Room.

With the coming of spring comes the strange urge to have done with winter and the things of winter. Housecleaning in the spring is one manifestation of this urge. The other is renovating and redecorating the home; new colors on the walls, new slip covers and hangings and new furnishings where the budget will allow.

When redecorating a room the first thing to consider is which furnishings to keep and which to replace or re-upholster. Determine which colors will predominate in them before selecting the colors for your walls and ceiling. Well-tailored slip-covers will save your furniture and add a note of freshness to the room. They can also repeat the chintz of your curtains or introduce a new color note. Also, an old faded rug can be dyed a dark brown, a plum color or perhaps a shade of taupe.

Where the home is being done over it is always well to remember that the walls should set the keynote for the color scheme. From the walls the floor and ceiling take their hue. A wall should not be a decorative object in itself but rather a kind of back drop that sets the stage. Walls and general color schemes of rooms which can be seen from each other through wide doorways or arches should be planned together. They do not need to look alike but should flow into each other harmoniously.

In a room with light-tinted walls where a change of color is desired a light tone should be kept. This will assure the harmonizing of the present furnishings with the new walls. Cream or tan may be replaced by oyster or light rose. A white wall may be redecorated in a cream color and a gray is easily harmonized with many interiors formerly keyed to another color.

Blue walls are cool and restful and make an excellent background for a light room that aspires to a certain amount of formality in its treatment. An atmospheric effect causes the interior to look roomier. This is achieved by using an "ash" tint. The "ash" tints include dove-gray, beige and hazy greens, lavenders, rose, orange and lime yellow.

A variation from the usual way of decorating is to have the walls done in a light neutral gray with the "room-color" on the ceiling. A deep rich color may be used for the floor or the covering. The wood trim and furniture may carry the accent color. A ceiling painted a light yellow gives a sunshiny effect to a dark room. Woodwork may be painted a darker yellow, while walls, doors and frames may be done in a soft cream color.

An attractive living room can be developed by using chartreuse green, aubergine (which is a purple-brown egg plant color), deep green, and white as color keynotes. The walls may be done in chartreuse, the rug and one chair in aubergine. White is effective for window curtains, the ceiling, the lamps and some of the furniture. Some of the white chairs should be upholstered in deep green. Mahogany pieces can be introduced most effectively in a room of this kind.

A room that is used both for living and dining may have a white painted dado and white bookcases, dado-height, to set off the portion of the room which is used as the dinette. The division is further accented by a carpet which is a different shade from the one used in the other portion of the room. Walls should be sand color, furniture in natural dark walnut varied by some bleached pieces. Curtains should be sand color edged with coral.

GARDEN TREND IS BACK TO SCENT

Gardeners all over the land are rediscovering the charm of fragrance. For a long period color schemes and changing styles of design have commanded so much attention that the old art of planting for scent was almost forgotten.

With the trend changing, however, the nose is competing with the eye in making final decisions on candidates for spring planting. The gardener who would be up to date must become acquainted with the plants to grow for fragrance.

For the same reason, perhaps, that the sense of smell is accentuated in the blind, we become more conscious of garden fragrance when the brilliant light of the summer day fades, and twilight makes of the garden a fairyland. Some flowers whose perfume is not detected in the daylight become fragrant at night. Others give off at night a perfume different from their daytime scent.

The old-fashioned tuberose which suffered a lapse of popularity for many years because it was too often used as a funeral flower, is returning to favor in gardens, being no longer used in funerals. Its odor, too heavy for the taste of many for indoor use, is delightful when diffused on the evening air. A few bulbs planted along the garden path when danger of frost is over, will be delightfully evident on summer evenings.

One of the most fragrant evening flowers is the night scented stock, usually listed as matthiola bicornis. A somewhat straggly, lilac-flowered plant, not too attractive in the daytime, it emits in the evening, or after a daylight shower, a cloud of sweetness. It should be sown where it is to grow.

The sweet scented tobacco, nicotiana alba, is surpassed by none in delightful fragrance. Its long tubular flowers close in midday, but open as evening approaches and give forth their rich perfume.

Sweet Rocket, a hardy perennial which grows easily from seed, is a most fragrant flower. It blossoms in early June two and three feet tall, with heads of star flowers resembling hardy phlox, white or lavender pink. Look for it in catalogues under hesperis matronalis. It was Marie Antoinette's favorite.

Evening primroses, oenotheras, are native American flowers of notable evening fragrance. Some varieties are hardy perennials, flowering from June to October, others are grown as annuals. They like dry soil with plenty of lime, and their fragrance is distinctive and delicate.

PLANS ARE COMPLETED FOR FORSYTHE PROJECT

New Office Structure Will Occupy Ground at 7811, East of Court House.

The Henry R. Weisels Co. announces the completion of plans and financial arrangements for the erection of an air-conditioned office building to be constructed at 7810 Forsythe boulevard, in Clayton, just east of the Courthouse. Preston J. Bradshaw is the architect. Morris F. Marks is consulting engineer.

The Forsythe Realty Co. purchased the property a few months ago through the Weisels company from Miss Jean Fay. The lot has a front of 50 feet on Forsythe boulevard by a depth of 200 feet, with a 20-foot alley on the west. The building will cover the entire frontage. Approximately 50 by 100 feet in the rear of the premises will be used for parking space.

Features include fireproof construction, complete refrigerated air conditioning, terrazzo floors, electric elevator and oil-burning heating system. The main entrance will be in the center of the building, flanked on each side by shops 22 by 50 feet, to be leased for retail purposes, and the remainder of the first floor will be arranged in offices. The second floor will be designed exclusively for physicians and dentists and the third floor for attorneys, realtors and insurance companies.

The building will represent an investment of approximately $150,000. It will be ready for occupancy about Nov. 1. The Henry R. Weisels Co. will install a branch office in the building.

BUILDING LOANS ARE 30 PER CENT OVER 1936

The volume of home loans made by local building and loan associations during March rose 48.5 per cent over the February figure, and 30.3 per cent above the total for March, 1936.

Last month, associations in St. Louis and St. Louis County recorded 193 loans totaling $590,617. The monthly loan total was $397,554 in February, 1937, and $453,090 in March, 1936.

"Last month's total represents a marked increase over the slight seasonal gain which is usually found in March," explained Alfred S. Zeller, president of the St. Louis League of Building and Loan Associations. "It is probable that this was the greatest volume of March lending for any year since 1927.

"The $590,617 total last month," he went on, "was 36 per cent higher than the average monthly figure for 1936. Higher totals were reached last year in only two months—April and May, the period of greatest building activity.

"Since an increasingly large proportion of these funds are used for building new homes," he concluded, "the figures indicate that the volume of spring building this year will be considerably greater than last year."

ACTIVITY BEING WITNESSED IN NEW DEVELOPMENT

Noteworthy activity is being witnessed in Wickfields, a new development on the Brown and Airport roads in Florissant Valley, recently launched through Mary Potter Love, Inc. Several handsome homes have been erected in this development, and others are planned. These include, notably, a house of attractive design being erected by Courtland Babcock Jr. of the St. Louis Country Day School, on a 2-acre tract acquired through the Love concern.

Wickfields is being developed by Mr. and Mrs. Leigh Wickam, representing the Wickam estate. The St. Louis Country Day School is in the heart of Florissant Valley.

This section has been made accessible through the opening of Twelfth boulevard and Natural Bridge road. It is reached directly by the St. Charles Rock road and the Brown road, the northward extension of McKnight road.

PEMBERTON SALESMANAGER OF M'KNIGHT LANE DEVELOPMENT

Norman W. Pemberton has been appointed exclusive sales agent for McKnight Lane, a colonial community on Ladue road at its intersection with McKnight road, being developed by the McKnight Development Co. Pemberton is re-entering the real estate business after spending a considerable time with the Home Owners Loan Corporation.

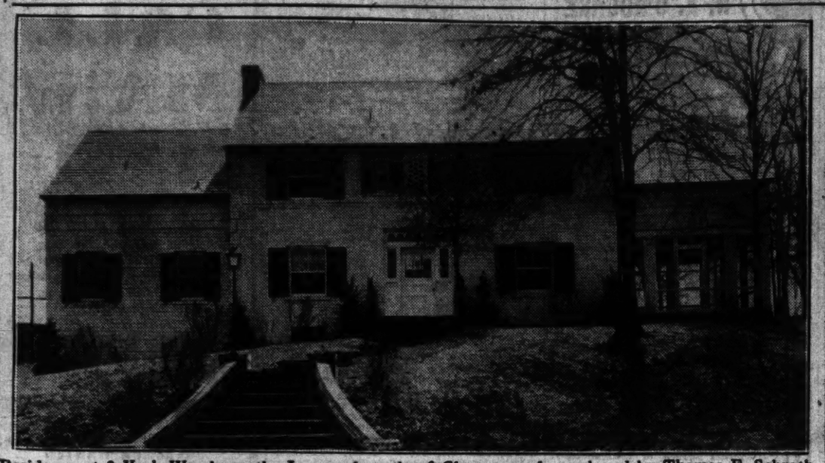
McKnight Lane comprises plots ranging from three-fourths of an acre and is protected by rigid building restrictions. Municipal and surface improvements are being rushed to completion. Two homes of Colonial design with three and four bedrooms and two baths are planned by George R. Winkler and R. K. Grueninger.

BADER & CO. RENEWS LEASE ON LOCUST STREET QUARTERS

A. J. Bader & Company, Inc., has renewed the lease on its quarters at 1112 Locust street, with 50 per cent additional floor space. The new lease is for a long term of years.

A. J. Bader is president and Gordon R. Bader is secretary of the company. The property is owned by Mrs. Mayme Kelly. Mercantile-Commerce Bank and Trust Company represented both parties in the lease.

Residences Recently Sold and Others Under Construction



Residence at 3 York Woods on the Lay road south of Clayton road, purchased by Thomas F. Schroth, represented by the Albert G. Blanke Real Estate Company.

Newly built Colonial residence at 7057 Westmorel and avenue of Mr. and Mrs. John Isaacs Jr. The site was acquired through J. M. Levi & Company who supervised construction of the building.

Sketch house being built in Wickfields, a new development on the Brown and Air Port roads, for Courtland Babcock Jr., of the St. Louis Country Day School. The site was purchased through Mary Potter Love, Inc.

METROPOLITAN AREA BUILDING UP SHARPLY

Contracts Awarded for Residential Construction Aggregated $1,770,330 in February.

Contracts awarded for residential building in St. Louis amounted to $1,770,300 in February of this year as compared with $588,900 in the corresponding period of 1936, as reported by the F. W. Dodge Corporation.

During the two opening months of this year residential building has more than doubled as compared with the same period of 1936. It amounted to $3,484,900 in January and February of this year, compared with $1,495,900 in the similar two months of 1936.

These figures are drawn for the St. Louis metropolitan area which includes East St. Louis, and covers the counties of St. Louis and St. Claire and Madison County in Illinois with a total 1930 population of 1,335,158 persons.

In the building district in which St. Louis is located, which is comprised of Southern Illinois, Western Tennessee, Eastern Missouri and Arkansas, the advance in residential building is also outstanding in the February just ended, for it amounted to $2,510,200, making a significant comparison with $863,100 for February 1936.

Total construction contracts awarded in the St. Louis area during the first two months of the current year advanced about three and a half times over those for the similar period of 1936, as evidenced by $11,771,000, compared with $3,424,600 for January and February of last year.

This advance in this metropolitan area greatly betters the advance in total construction in the entire 37 states east of the Rockies where the advance was only 22 per cent in all classes of construction during the similar period.

Private construction as differentiated from public construction made a significant advance, for it was three times as large in the first two months of 1937 as in the first two months of 1936. It amounted to $6,265,600 in the first two months of this year compared with $1,883,400 in the first two months of last year. Private construction is most important to business in general because of the broad diversification of labor, building supplies and equipment which are involved in it.

Non-residential building made a significant advance during the two opening months of the current year, for it multiplied three times over the similar period for 1936. Contracts amounted to $1,586,500 during the two opening months of the current year as compared with $539,900 for the similar period of last year.

Carl K. Sauter was the builder and the site was acquired through J. M. Levi & Co., which had supervision of construction.

AVERAGE HOME BUILT IN 1936 COST $4367

Price Compares With $4128 in 1935, Loan League Calculates.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, April 3.—The cost of constructing the average home in 1936 was 5.7 per cent greater than in 1935, the United States Building & Loan League said today.

Conditions now involved in the building of homes correspond with those that prevailed during the revival period of 1924, it said.

The average home built in 1936 cost $4367 compared with $4128 in 1935. Figures on the rise in building costs between January and December last year, however, showed that the increase of $239 was not spent to provide another thousand cubic feet of space in the home but to provide the same general type of home at the higher cost.

The accommodations afforded by the average new house and the cost at which they are now provided correspond closely with conditions in 1924, when the average cost of one-family homes was $4317.

Clarence T. Rice of Kansas City, a member of the league's Home Building and Home Owning Committee, said a survey showed the cottage type of home, averaging between 18,000 and 19,000 cubic feet with four or five rooms, has been the dominant factor in the home building revival of the past two years. These one-family homes built in all cities of over 10,000 population cost between $4100 and $4350. The national average cost per cubic foot is between 23 and 24 cents, though varying widely according to locality.

He said savings, building and loan association financing for newly constructed homes in the two years averaged $3250 per house.

To Occupy Larger Quarters.

The Haffner & Gibstine Real Estate Co., for several years located at 5718 Easton avenue, will move to larger quarters at 5307 Easton avenue, on or about April 5.

Miss Goedecke recently purchased the northeast corner of Cherokee and Ohio avenues for a reported price of $27,500. The site is occupied by a building which is to be converted for stores and office purposes.

REMODELING OF SCHOOL BUILDING UNDER WAY

Alteration Bids Asked on Hosmer Hall Which Is to Be New Wydown Jr.

Bids have been asked by the Clayton School Board for refinishing the Wydown Junior School building, formerly Hosmer Hall, at 6584 Wydown boulevard, Clayton, purchased by the board last October for $117,500.

Plans call for the remodeling of the interior and for dividing the present rooms into regular size class rooms. The stairway is to be rebuilt and additional entrances constructed. There will also be other work, such as painting, etc. The total cost is estimated at $20,000. Bids for the work now being received at the office by the board will be opened April 7 at 8 p. m.

The two English rooms are to have fireplaces and the art room is to be finished in monk's cloth. Superintendent John L. Bracken said that he did not know the exact number of the rooms of the present building, nor the number of rooms the remodeled structure would contain. Plans for the remodeling were drawn by William B. Ittner, architect, under whose supervision the work will be done.

PLANS ARE COMPLETED FOR FORSYTHE PROJECT

New Office Structure Will Occupy Ground at 7811, East of Court House.

The Henry R. Weisels Co. announces the completion of plans and financial arrangements for the erection of an air-conditioned office building to be constructed at 7810 Forsythe boulevard, in Clayton, just east of the Courthouse. Preston J. Bradshaw is the architect. Morris F. Marks is consulting engineer.

The Forsythe Realty Co. purchased the property a few months ago through the Weisels company from Miss Jean Fay. The lot has a front of 50 feet on Forsythe boulevard by a depth of 200 feet, with a 20-foot alley on the west. The building will cover the entire frontage. Approximately 50 by 100 feet in the rear of the premises will be used for parking space.

Features include fireproof construction, complete refrigerated air conditioning, terrazzo floors, electric elevator and oil-burning heating system. The main entrance will be in the center of the building, flanked on each side by shops 22 by 50 feet, to be leased for retail purposes, and the remainder of the first floor will be arranged in offices. The second floor will be designed exclusively for physicians and dentists and the third floor for attorneys, realtors and insurance companies.

The building will represent an investment of approximately $150,000. It will be ready for occupancy about Nov. 1. The Henry R. Weisels Co. will install a branch office in the building.

BUILDING LOANS ARE 30 PER CENT OVER 1936

The volume of home loans made by local building and loan associations during March rose 48.5 per cent over the February figure, and 30.3 per cent above the total for March, 1936.

Last month, associations in St. Louis and St. Louis County recorded 193 loans totaling $590,617. The monthly loan total was $397,554 in February, 1937, and $453,090 in March, 1936.

"Last month's total represents a marked increase over the slight seasonal gain which is usually found in March," explained Alfred S. Zeller, president of the St. Louis League of Building and Loan Associations. "It is probable that this was the greatest volume of March lending for any year since 1927.

"The $590,617 total last month," he went on, "was 36 per cent higher than the average monthly figure for 1936. Higher totals were reached last year in only two months—April and May, the period of greatest building activity.

"Since an increasingly large proportion of these funds are used for building new homes," he concluded, "the figures indicate that the volume of spring building this year will be considerably greater than last year."

ACTIVITY BEING WITNESSED IN NEW DEVELOPMENT

Noteworthy activity is being witnessed in Wickfields, a new development on the Brown and Airport roads in Florissant Valley, recently launched through Mary Potter Love, Inc. Several handsome homes have been erected in this development, and others are planned. These include, notably, a house of attractive design being erected by Courtland Babcock Jr. of the St. Louis Country Day School, on a 2-acre tract acquired through the Love concern.

Wickfields is being developed by Mr. and Mrs. Leigh Wickam, representing the Wickam estate. The St. Louis Country Day School is in the heart of Florissant Valley.

This section has been made accessible through the opening of Twelfth boulevard and Natural Bridge road. It is reached directly by the St. Charles Rock road and the Brown road, the northward extension of McKnight road.

PEMBERTON SALESMANAGER OF M'KNIGHT LANE DEVELOPMENT

Norman W. Pemberton has been appointed exclusive sales agent for McKnight Lane, a colonial community on Ladue road at its intersection with McKnight road, being developed by the McKnight Development Co. Pemberton is re-entering the real estate business after spending a considerable time with the Home Owners Loan Corporation.

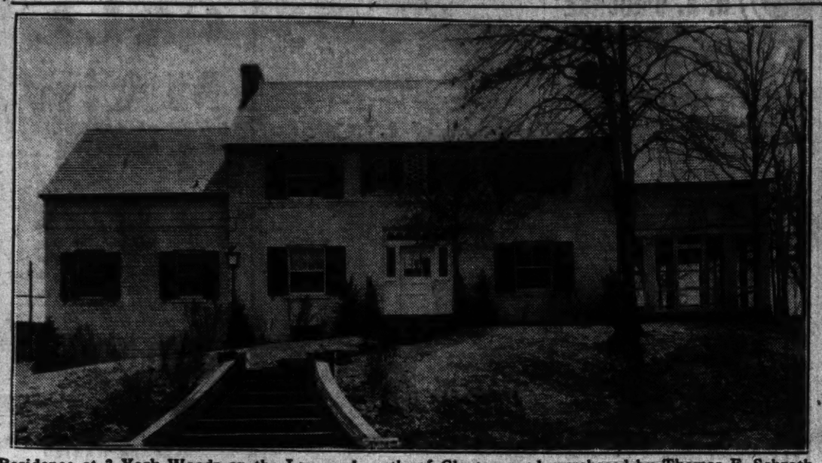
McKnight Lane comprises plots ranging from three-fourths of an acre and is protected by rigid building restrictions. Municipal and surface improvements are being rushed to completion. Two homes of Colonial design with three and four bedrooms and two baths are planned by George R. Winkler and H. X. Grueninger.

BADER & CO. RENEWS LEASE ON LOCUST STREET QUARTERS

A. J. Bader & Company, Inc., has renewed the lease on its quarters at 1112 Locust street, with 50 per cent additional floor space. The new lease is for a long term of years.

A. J. Bader is president and Gordon R. Bader is secretary of the company. The property is owned by Mrs. Mayme Kelly. Mercantile-Commerce Bank and Trust Company represented both parties in the lease.

Residences Recently Sold and Others Under Construction



Residence at 3 York Woods on the Lay road south of Clayton road, purchased by Thomas F. Schroth, represented by the Albert G. Blanke Real Estate Company.

Newly built Colonial residence at 7057 Westmoreland avenue of Mr. and Mrs. John Isaacs Jr. The site was acquired through J. M. Levi & Company who supervised construction of the building.

Sketch house being built in Wickfields, a new development on the Brown and Air Port roads, for Courtland Babcock Jr., of the St. Louis Country Day School. The site was purchased through Mary Potter Love, Inc.

METROPOLITAN AREA BUILDING UP SHARPLY

Contracts Awarded for Residential Construction Aggregated $1,770,330 in February.

Contracts awarded for residential building in St. Louis amounted to $1,770,300 in February of this year as compared with $588,900 in the corresponding period of 1936, as reported by the F. W. Dodge Corporation.

During the two opening months of this year residential building has more than doubled as compared with the same period of 1936. It amounted to $3,484,900 in January and February of this year, compared with $1,495,900 in the similar two months of 1936.

These figures are drawn for the St. Louis metropolitan area which includes East St. Louis, and covers the counties of St. Louis and St. Claire and Madison County in Illinois with a total 1930 population of 1,335,158 persons.

In the building district in which St. Louis is located, which is comprised of Southern Illinois, Western Tennessee, Eastern Missouri and Arkansas, the advance in residential building is also outstanding in the February just ended, for it amounted to $2,510,200, making a significant comparison with $863,100 for February 1936.

Total construction contracts awarded in the St. Louis area during the first two months of the current year advanced about three and a half times over those for the similar period of 1936, as evidenced by $11,771,000, compared with $3,424,600 for January and February of last year.

This advance in this metropolitan area greatly betters the advance in total construction in the entire 37 states east of the Rockies where the advance was only 22 per cent in all classes of construction during the similar period.

Private construction as differentiated from public construction made a significant advance, for it was three times as large in the first two months of 1937 as in the first two months of 1936. It amounted to $6,265,600 in the first two months of this year compared with $1,883,400 in the first two months of last year. Private construction is most important to business in general because of the broad diversification of labor, building supplies and equipment which are involved in it.

Non-residential building made a significant advance during the two opening months of the current year, for it multiplied three times over the similar period for 1936. Contracts amounted to $1,586,500 during the two opening months of the current year as compared with $539,900 for the similar period of last year.

UNIVERSITY CITY RESIDENCE OF COLONIAL ARCHITECTURE

The Colonial residence of 7057 Westmoreland avenue, University City, recently completed for Mr. and Mrs. John Isaacs Jr., is a handsome addition to this block.

The first floor contains living room with open porch, dining room, powder room, breakfast room and kitchen; three master bedroms, two baths and sleeping porch on second floor; maid's room and bath as well as children's playroom on third floor. Carl K. Sauter was the builder and the site was acquired through J. M. Levi & Co., which had supervision of construction.

Bungalow of English design at 6430 Winona avenue purchased by Mr. and Mrs. John J. Poeschel from William L. Moorman. H. A. O'Rourke, Inc., handled the transaction.

AVERAGE HOME BUILT IN 1936 COST $4367

Price Compares With $4128 in 1935, Loan League Calculates.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, April 3.—The cost of constructing the average home in 1936 was 5.7 per cent greater than in 1935, the United States Building & Loan League said today.

Conditions now involved in the building of homes correspond with those that prevailed during the revival period of 1924, it said.

The average home built in 1936 cost $4367 compared with $4128 in 1935. Figures on the rise in building costs between January and December last year, however, showed that the increase of $239 was not spent to provide another thousand cubic feet of space in the home but to provide the same general type of home at the higher cost.

The accommodations afforded by the average new house and the cost at which they are now provided correspond closely with conditions in 1924, when the average cost of one-family homes was $4317.

Clarence T. Rice of Kansas City, a member of the league's Home Building and Home Owning Committee, said a survey showed the cottage type of home, averaging between 18,000 and 19,000 cubic feet with four or five rooms, has been the dominant factor in the home building revival of the past two years. These one-family homes built in all cities of over 10,000 population cost between $4100 and $4350. The national average cost per cubic foot is between 23 and 24 cents, though varying widely according to locality.

He said savings, building and loan association financing for newly constructed homes in the two years averaged $3250 per house.

To Occupy Larger Quarters.

The Haffner & Gibstine Real Estate Co., for several years located at 5713 Easton avenue, will move to larger quarters at 5307 Easton avenue, on or about April 5.

The first floor will comprise stores and the second floor, 11 offices with every modern facility. The basement will be available for warehouse and cold storage rooms, including a refrigerating plant which will serve the entire premises.

The building is being erected by Stella Goedecke, a client of Wanstrath, who is financing the project to the extent of $35,000 under a five-year amortization loan. Plans for the building were drawn by J. M. Dunham, architect.

Miss Goedecke recently purchased the northeast corner of Cherokee and Ohio avenues for a reported price of $27,500. The site is occupied by a building which is to be converted for stores and office purposes.

REMODELING OF SCHOOL BUILDING UNDER WAY

Alteration Bids Asked on Hosmer Hall Which Is to Be New Wydown Jr.

Bids have been asked by the Clayton School Board for refinishing the Wydown Junior School building, formerly Hosmer Hall, at 6584 Wydown boulevard, Clayton, purchased by the board last October for $117,500.

Plans call for the remodeling of the interior and for dividing the present rooms into regular size class rooms. The stairway is to be rebuilt and additional entrances constructed. There will also be other work, such as painting, etc. The total cost is estimated at $20,000. Bids for the work now being received at the office by the board will be opened April 7 at 8 p. m.

The two English rooms are to have fireplaces and the art room is to be finished in monk's cloth. Superintendent John L. Bracken said that he did not know the exact number of the rooms of the present building, nor the number of rooms the remodeled structure would contain. Plans for the remodeling were drawn by William B. Ittner, architect, under whose supervision the work will be done.

Don't Be Misled!!

Some loans today have the condition that you can only pay 20% of the principal in any one year or it would take 5 years to pay off that loan. WHAT OUR CUSTOMERS SAY:

Joseph E. Burger
President

Store Manager for Kroger Stores at Kingshighway & Chippewa writes:

"About 10 months ago I bought a reconditioned 1934 Master Chevrolet Coach from Glenn Huffman of The South Side Chevrolet Company. This car has given me excellent service and I haven't spent a dime for repairs in the ten thousand miles I have driven it and believe me, I'm plenty satisfied."

Dorcas Taylor Is Married to Charles Gay III

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Lackland Taylor Wed in Small Ceremony at Home—Dinner for Guests.

MISS DORCAS CARR TAYLOR, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Lackland Taylor, was married at 5:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon at her parents' home, 4607 Maryland avenue, to Charles Edward Gay III of Savannah, Ga. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Edward Gay Jr., who arrived Friday with Hunter Clay, a close friend, for a day of pre-wedding parties, and to be present at the ceremony. Other guests included relatives of the bride and close friends, who remained for an informal reception.

The Rev. Sylvester Tucker of the St. Louis Cathedral performed the ceremony in a simple setting of Easter lilies and white snapdragon arranged with candles and greenery at the living room mantel. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Marie Carr Taylor, and walked down the vine-covered stairway with her father, who gave her in marriage. Wilkinson Stark of Detroit was best man. A harpist and violinist concealed by ferns played the wedding march.

White marquisette embroidered in a satin-thread flower design was fashioned over white satin for the bride's gown, made simply with a V neckline, long close sleeves and a medium-length train built into the skirt. Her tulle veil reached her knees from a halo of orange blossoms worn by Mrs. Taylor at her wedding, and she carried a small round bouquet of lilies of the valley. An old-fashioned, hand-made topaz necklace which had belonged to the bridegroom's grandmother, and given to the bride by his mother, encircled her throat.

Miss Marie Carr Taylor wore peach tinted chiffon over taffeta, a floor-length afternoon frock designed with short sleeves puffed above the elbow. Instead of carrying the usual armful of flowers, she fastened a corsage of pansies at her belt. Mrs. Taylor chose a purplish blue chiffon with lace sleeves and bodice top, with which she wore orchids.

Following the ceremony dinner was served to the briday party and a few friends seated about a U-shaped table set in a third floor room. White sweet peas and white stock were combined in the decorations, which included lighted candles and the wedding cake. In addition to Mr. and Mrs. Gay, the maid of honor and best man, guests were Mr. Clay, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Baldwin, Mr. and Mrs. Wade Turner Childress, Mr. and Mrs. Fielding Childress, Mr. and Mrs. James Lee Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Lannan Benoist, Mr. and Mrs. Leicester Faust, the bride's brother, Edgar Lackland Taylor Jr., and her cousins, Benoist Tompkins and Sheppard Smith.

Mr. and Mrs. Gay have left for Mexico, D. F., and Havana on their wedding trip, after which they will continue by boat to Savannah to live.

Friday, the briday party and out-of-town guests were invited for luncheon at the Huntleigh Village home of Mr. and Mrs. Leo De Smet Carton. Later in the afternoon the bride's aunt, Mrs. Rufus Lackland Taylor, entertained them for cocktails at the Park Plaza, and for dinner the older group was entertained at the St. Louis Country Club by the bride's uncle and aunt, Dr. and Mrs. Elsworth S. Smith, and the wedding party went to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wade Childress. Yesterday, preceding the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Richard Baldwin served luncheon informally to the out-of-town guests at their home, 34 Westmoreland place.

After attending the Sacred Heart Convent, the bride completed her studies at Eden Hall, Torresdale, Pa. She was a debutante several years ago, became a member of the Junior League and served as a maid of honor at the Veiled Prophet ball. Her mother was Miss Marie Papin Carr, and her great-grandfather, Judge William C. Carr, was one of the incorporators of St. Louis. She is a descendant of Pierre Laclede.

Mr. Gay is an alumnus of the University of Virginia and a member of the Cotillion and Oglethorpe Clubs. He is associated in business with his father, who is president of the Savannah and Atlanta Railroad.

Musical Tea for Visitors.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank B. Hawley, 52 Hillvale drive, have as their guests Mr. Hawley's brother-in-law and sister, Prof. and Mrs. Winfield Rogers of Cleveland, O., and their young son, Randolph; who arrived yesterday to spend a week. Prof. Rogers is professor of modern literature at Western College, Cleveland. Mrs. Hawley will give a musical tea this afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock, for the visitors.

Claytonshire Coaching Club's Annual Ball

ELEVEN of the 15 members of the Claytonshire Coaching Club, whose three ancient vehicles in which they go New Year's calling have become familiar sights to residents of the countryside west of Clayton, took turns in receiving 350 guests at the St. Louis Country Club last night at their second annual ball.

Two of the three coaches stood at either side of the orchestra which played in the main dining room. The third, too wide for the doors, was wheeled onto the dining room veranda.

Decorations were held to a minimum, to permit of additional funds for music and entertainment, which featured a Scotch band playing tunes on their bagpipes throughout the evening. The club colors, scarlet and gray, were much in evidence, however. Members wore scarlet tail coats with gray satin lapels, bona fide English hunting coats bought in London last summer from a hunt club going out of existence. Walls were concealed behind scarlet paper. In the foyer a life-sized cut-out of a coach stood before the mantel, and a polo scene hung over the bar.

At 8:30 o'clock, the trustees' dinner was served in the private dining room, where a strolling accordion player was stationed. Guests, including parents of the members, the younger married group and debutantes of several seasons, arrived at 10:30 and stayed for a sausage and scrambled egg breakfast, served at dawn.

Harry Langenberg Jr. is the motivating spirit of the club, the membership of which includes Oliver Langenberg Vietor Davis, John A. Holmes, Trustin B. Boyd, William and Joseph Drew, Wickham Moore, Arthur B. Shepley, John Valle Janes and Dickson Pierce. Three

St. Louisans Enjoy Benefit Russian Carnival And Dance at Norwood Hills Country Club

ST. LOUISANS in gay Russian costumes mingled with others more conventionally attired at the Russian Balagan and costume ball at Norwood Hills Country Club Friday night. The party, sponsored by the St. Louis branch of the Russian Refugee Children's Welfare Society, was for benefit of the orphans.

Young women guests chose, almost without exception, the peasant style of dress—chaplet of flowers in the hair, heavily embroidered blouse and a short, full skirt, partially covered by a gaudy apron. Mrs. William W. Moulton, Mrs. Vadim Smirnoff, Miss Noel Kennerly, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Claude S. Kennerly; Miss Marian Ewing, daughter of Nathaniel W. Ewing; Miss Winifred Fisher, Miss Betty Fitz-Gerald, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Fitz-Gerald, and Mrs. Fred G. Carpenter were among those in such accouterment.

Before going into the dining room for dancing and entertainment, guests visited the tpaktnp (third-rate saloon) built of logs in one corner of the lounge and topped by a cock weather vane. Vodka, zoobricky (vodka highball) and krulshon (ladies punch) were served with red caviar, smoked sprats and pickled kilki.

At the bazaar across the room, khalva (candy) and Russian cigarettes were sold with a varied assortment of native-made wearing apparel and bric-a-brac. A Russian countryside scene with an izba (hut) and peasants was painted by Mme. Dura Dvornikoff on the walls.

The Polish Falcon Society, in native garb, opened the floor show with dances. Russian songs by P. I. Gregory; a Cossack dance, Kuban, by Mark Paley; folk dances by the Ukrainian Society, and an acrobatic act were other features. A second show with performers in costume singing and dancing, plus a Punch and Judy act, was presented shortly after midnight.

Inspired by the entertainers, guests turned from ball room steps to folk dancing in large groups later in the evening. "The Volga Boatman" and other popularized Russian songs superseded favorite "hits" of the season.

The St. Louis branch of the organization was formed several years ago in memory of the late Mrs. V. P. Netchvolodoff, for her work for the refugees. Mr. Netchvolodoff is president with Mrs. Georgette Study as vice-president; Dr. A. F. Bucholtz, treasurer; E. V. Nay, secretary.

Spring Wedding In Elaborate Floral Setting

Helen Feuerbacher and Joseph M. Dilschneider Are Married at Home of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Feuerbacher.

BENEATH Gothic arches, in a chapel-like setting in her parents' home, 32 West Brentmoor Park, Miss Helen Ruth Feuerbacher, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Henry Feuerbacher, became the bride last night of Joseph M. Dilschneider. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dilschneider, 6067 West Cabanne place. More than 250 guests grouped themselves about the lower floor—a succession of spacious rooms with a large central reception hall, to witness the ceremony, performed by the Rev. Dr. Roy Calvin Dobson of the First Presbyterian Church. As many more guests arrived at 8:30 o'clock for a reception.

Floral decorations were elaborate. Front doors were removed to leave three arches, and the loggia in front of them was inclosed in canvas and filled with soft ferns and many lighted candles as a recessed background. The openings themselves were outlined with greenery and crowned with dozens of Easter lilies which trailed down the sides, and were separated by more candles in floor standards.

The wedding party proceeded down the wide stairway, festooned with ferns and banked with white flowers, passed a tall mirror in which calla lilies were reflected, and walked through a ribbon aisle to the altar. Mrs. Arthur H. Feuerbacher Jr., the former Miss Elizabeth Ferguson, was matron of honor for her sister-in-law, who chose Miss Josephine Kuhn, Miss Clara Frampton, Miss Marjorie Henger, Mrs. William W. Westlake and Mrs. Max W. Feuerbacher Jr. for bridesmaids.

They wore dusty pink mousseline de sole over taffeta, old-fashioned frocks made alike with short off-the-shoulder puffed sleeves, low square necklines and skirts flaring wide from the knees and finished with three bands of the material. They carried all-white bouquets of lilacs and snapdragon and wore bandeaus of fresh flowers in their hair.

Mr. Feuerbacher gave his daughter in marriage. She wore a simply cut gown of white satin, with long close sleeves, full at the top, a low square decolletage, and a long skirt falling in unbroken folds to a train. Her tulle veil was secured to a fine pleated ruching framing her face, and her modesty veil fell over a bouquet of lilies of the valley centered with white orchids.

Arthur H. Feuerbacher Jr. was best man, and ushers were Charles Feuerbacher, another brother of the bride; Max W. Feuerbacher Jr., a cousin; Henry Dilschneider Jr., the bridegroom's brother; Marquard Braun, Robert Stoltman, William W. Westlake, Richard Roberts and Jack Phelan.

Mr. and Mrs. Feuerbacher and the bridegroom's parents received with the bridal party in front of the arches after the service, the bride's mother in acqua-blue lace and orchids, and Mrs. Dilschneider in black chiffon. Later the guests were served from the long reception table in the dining room, in which the white decorations were repeated. Silver bowls of stock and white candles in silver candelabra stood in the center, surrounded by silver containers of white bonbons. A three-tiered wedding cake, topped by a doll bridal pair, adorned the serving table near by.

Pink tulips were arranged in blue pottery bowls on the piano and tables in the living room, in which an orchestra played the wedding music. Yellow predominated in the breakfast room, in which a smaller reception table was set, and in which window boxes were filled with lavender stock and yellow roses.

The side porch was inclosed in a spring garden to house the table for the wedding party. Dogwood covered the canvassed walls, and in the corners baskets of calla lilies and pale yellow snapdragon hung over lattices entwined with fern. The table itself held white china bowls of gardenias, sweet peas and stock, and candles were contained in white angel figures.

Out-of-town guests included Mrs. W. S. T. Smith of Los Angeles, the bride's aunt, and James Topp of Cincinnati.

Mr. and Mrs. Dilschneider will spend their honeymoon in New Orleans and Pass Christian, and will live at 7563 Buckingham drive.

The bride, a debutante of 1932, attended Mary Institute and was graduated from Miss Evans' School. Later, for a year, she attended Pine Manor, Wellsley, Mass. She is a granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles Orthwein. Mr. Dilschneider attended St. Louis University.

St. Louisan Visiting in East.

Mrs. Marjorie McKittrick Berrien, daughter of Walter McKittrick, 4399 McPherson avenue, who accompanied St. Louis friends to Nassau several weeks ago, is at present with her mother, Mrs. Holland McKittrick, at the Lombardy in New York. While in Nassau, she was the guest of Lady Beda Clifford.

Freda Riddle Birge Becomes Bride of W. H. Woodward

CRISP corn-yellow tulle gowns of the bridesmaids and bouquets of multi-colored flowers lent a spring touch to the appointments for the wedding of Miss Freda Riddle Birge and William Henry Woodward, which took place at 8:30 o'clock last night at Pilgrim Congregational Church. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Blackmore Birge, 120 West Swon avenue, Webster Groves. Mr. Woodward is the son of Mrs. Harold E. Woodward of the St. Regis Apartments. The marriage service was read by the Rev. Dr. Truman B. Douglass, pastor of the church, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Karl Morgan Block, pastor of the Church of St. Michael and St. George.

The bride entered the church on the arm of her father, who gave her in marriage. She wore her mother's wedding gown of heavy ivory faille fashioned 35 years ago, with a close-fitting bodice overlaid with heirloom lace. A modified neckline has replaced the high boned lace collar, and the puffed sleeves are elbow length. The skirt, its fullness achieved by fine tucks about the hips, falls over a deep cream ruffled taffeta underdress into a flared train. The ivory tinted tulle veil was arranged with a narrow off-the-face brimmed cap with orange blossoms at the back. Clusters of white stock composed the bridal bouquet.

Miss Jane Birge was maid of honor for her sister. Another sister, Miss Edna Birge; Miss Jane Blackmer and Mrs. V. Paul Sullivan of Cincinnati, the former Miss Margaret Flynn of St. Louis, were bridesmaids. Their yellow frocks, that of the maid of honor a shade lighter than the rest, were made simply with tight bodices and short puffed sleeves. Two layers of the filmy fabric formed skirts that swept the floor. Each young woman wore crownless pleated turbans of maize tulle with a narrow fold of delphinium blue tulle trimming the brims. Miss Jane Birge carried blue delphinium and yellow daisies, and the bridesmaids' bouquets were of spring blossoms of various hues.

Edgar Woodward, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. The ushers were: Charlton A. Gunter, William King Jr., Dr. Ralph M. Abell, Dr. Robert Elliott and Arthur Birge Jr., brother of the bride. The bridal party passed down a candle-lighted aisle to the altar, which was banked high with palms and ferns and illuminated with cathedral tapers.

After the ceremony a small reception was held at the home of Mr.

Wives of Supreme Court Justices Seldom Use Social Precedence

WASHINGTON, April 3.

CAPITAL society sees the wives of Supreme Court Justices more frequently than it does their husbands.

These six women—two of the nine Justices are bachelors and one is a widower—rank near the top as social precedence goes. If they wished, they could attend dinners nightly and head receiving lines and patroness lists. Normally, however, they are content to take less prominent roles.

Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes, wife of the Chief Justice, sometimes attends large luncheons. Mrs. George Sutherland never does, having let it be known she has retired from social life.

Mrs. Owen J. Roberts is "at home" every Monday both in and out of the social season. Mrs. Louis Brandeis has not observed her customary Mondays "at home" this year.

Mrs. Harlan F. Stone's interests carry her into the fields of art, social work and music. Mrs. Pierce Butler's principal activity outside her home is church work.

In one respect all are alike. They make occasional visits to the Supreme Court chamber. Sometimes their presence indicate the imminence of a major decision.

The Chief Justice and Mrs. Hughes limit their social engagements—either at home or elsewhere—to Saturday night. Mrs. Hughes, however, attends and gives frequent luncheons and teas. Both go to White House receptions.

Justice and Mrs. Brandeis, the eldest of the six pairs, never go out in the evening, even to the White House. Their Sunday afternoon teas are an institution here. Not intended as social affairs, they serve rather to bring together groups of congenial persons.

Justice and Mrs. Butler frequently attend dinners, but friends say she cares little for society. There was quite a stir at the Supreme Court restaurant once this term when she lunched there with her husband.

Wives of two younger Justices are the most frequently seen of the group. Mrs. Roberts often shows friends through the Supreme Court building or stops in her husband's office. She goes to parties, but is best known for her teas, given in their old Georgetown home.

Justice and Mrs. Stone have gone about less this season than usual because of his recent illness. They both enjoy music and often occupy boxes at concerts.

Mrs. Stone paints well enough to exhibit and sometimes sell her water colors. She also plays the piano. She is president of the Visiting Nurses' Association, and is active in the Travelers' Aid and the Y. M. C. A.

Tea Tomorrow for Mrs. Ida H. Holloway

MRS. HENRY B. PFLAGER, 5290 Waterman boulevard, will honor her mother, Mrs. Ida H. Holloway of Cincinnati, at a tea tomorrow afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock, at the Junior League Club rooms, 4932 Maryland avenue. About 100 guests will be present at the party, which will open the exhibition of Mrs. Holloway's water colors, to be shown to the public at the Junior League rooms from Tuesday through Saturday.

The hostess has asked the following women to serve: Mrs. Warren Lammert, Mrs. Rex Brasher, Mrs. Grove F. Newhard, Mrs. G. C. Taylor, Miss Louise Woodruff, Mrs. Alfred W. Brown, Mrs. Nelson B. Gatch, Mrs. Helen Mills Richmond and Mrs. William Cooper Evans.

Mrs. Holloway, a 71-year-old artist, has studied under Frank Duveneck of the Cincinnati Art Academy and Henry B. Snell of the National Academy of Art. She has exhibited at the Cincinnati Art Museum, Woman's Art Club and MacDowell Society of Cincinnati, also in New York and in Columbus, O.

Miss Isobel Acruman Wed to F. P. Knight

Acruman, 7255 Delmar boulevard, became the bride of Frederick Pierce Knight yesterday morning at 11 o'clock in a service witnessed by members of the two families and a few close friends. The ceremony was performed by Dr. Roy Calvin Dobson, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, before a window at the south end of the living room at the Acruman home. A large standard of white spring flowers formed a background.

The bride wore a costume suit of navy blue wool crepe with tan accessories. Her corsage was of gardenias. Mrs. Acruman was in navy and light blue crepe with an orchid corsage.

The bridegroom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Knight, Springfield, Mo., were present for the ceremony. They are the guests of Dr. William A. Knight, 8528 Halls Ferry road.

Following a wedding trip the young pair will make their home in Jefferson City. The bride attended the St. Louis School of Fine Arts. Her husband, who has made his home at 7430 Washington boulevard for the last two years, attended Drury College at Springfield. He is a member of Theta Kappa Nu fraternity.

A large number of pre-wedding parties have been given for the bride. WASHINGTON SCENE

By the POE SISTERS

WASHINGTON women who go to London for the coronation will find a real welcome at the American Woman's Club, with its large membership not only of American women who visit London frequently but those who are married to Englishmen.

One of the leaders in the club is the former Miss Margaretta Drexel, of Philadelphia, now the Countess of Winchelsea.

Among those Americans who are bound for the coronation are Mr. and Mrs. James Cromwell, the latter formerly Miss Doris Duke. Jimmy Cromwell spent his boyhood in Washington when his mother was Mrs. Oliver Cromwell before her second marriage to Edward T. Stotesbury of Philadelphia.

Mrs. Cromwell declared last year that what she wanted most of all was a home on the seashore. The lovely low rambling house she designed grew into a reality, with beautiful landscaping and gardens, in Honolulu. Mr. and Mrs. Cromwell flew from there to California last week on the first step of their journey to London for the coronation. One of the places they will visit when they arrive in London will be a tiny shop where real American ice cream soda is served. Since the young Cromwells discovered it and its prize product, it has become a favorite rendezvous of the American colony there.

NOW that it is cherry blossom time in Washington, the motors of residents and pilgrims alike turn into the Speedway. When Chief Justice and Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes drive around the Basin this year on their annual trip to view the blossoms, they may recall when the cherry trees were saplings. Mrs. William Howard Taft, inspired the planting of the trees during her husband's term as President, and all Washington concurred in her plan to make the Speedway a boulevard where one could enjoy a leisurely buggy ride in the spring and summer.

The buggy still was a favorite equipage when President Roosevelt was Assistant Secretary of the Navy in the Wilson administration. This was the type of vehicle furnished by the Government in those days to many officials, although some of them had their own automobiles.

It was no unusual sight, either, to see the Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Daniels, the former now the Ambassador to Mexico, paying official visits in a horse-drawn victoria, and the Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Franklin K. Lane and the Postmaster-General and Mrs. Burleson were others who followed the same practice.

It was always amusing to their friends that Admiral George Dewey drove a pair of horses every afternoon, while his wife set out for her afternoon drive in an automobile.

The Admiral and Mrs. Dewey always met, however, at Pierce's Mill in Rock Creek Park for the daily task of feeding the ducks behind the little mill.

ONE of the most traveled little boys in the diplomatic corps, Johann von Numers, son of the Secretary of the Finnish Legation and Mme. von Numers, who is going on 3, will embark on his fourth ocean voyage the latter part of the month for summer in his homeland.

Johann, who has blue eyes, golden hair and a winning smile, speaks little English, but knows Swedish and Finnish. Therefore, his friends in Washington, young and old alike, are picking up a bit of both languages, much to Johann's delight. He told his mother gravely he was glad "they were learning to talk." From Johann's point of view, his own fluency in the languages he knows makes him regard his friends' halting Swedish and Finnish with some amusement. Mme. von Numers and her son will be joined in Finland later in the spring by the Secretary, and they will return to Washington again in the fall.

Garesche-Walsh Wedding Is Held

A WEDDING of interest to St. Louisans is that of Miss Mary Louise Walsh, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Joseph Walsh of St. Joseph, Mo., and John Paul Garesche of Madison, Ill., which took place yesterday morning at 10 o'clock at St. Mary's Church at Maryville, Mo. The Rev. Isadore Diebold performed the ceremony. The church, decorated with ferns and white flowers and lighted by candles, was the scene of the marriage of the bride's parents and of her maternal grandparents, Mrs. Nicholas Sturm of Maryville and the late Mr. Sturm.

Following a prelude of music, Mrs. Joseph Montgomery Phipps of Carroll, Ia., as matron of honor, preceded the bride down the aisle. She was gowned in chartreuse chiffon over yellow, made with a V-neckline and slit elbow length sleeves. Her large leghorn hat was trimmed in the same two shades of the dress and she carried a colonial nosegay of pink roses, lilies of the valley and sweet peas.

The bride's gown was of white satin, made princesse style and ornamented by bands of pearls which were repeated at the end of the long sleeves. Her tulle veil, attached to a wreath of orange blossoms, fell over the train of the dress. On top of her white satin prayer book was a white orchid, from which cascaded lilies of the valley.

Robert Garesche was best man for his brother. They are the sons of Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand A. Garesche. Another brother, Philip, and the bride's brother, Richard Walsh of Schenectady, N. Y., were ushers. Richard Garesche, also a brother, and Edward Flynn of Kansas City served mass.

Following the ceremony breakfast was served at Hotel Robidoux in St. Joseph to the wedding party, relatives and out-of-town guests. A large centerpiece of various white spring flowers and silver candelabra with white tapers formed the decorations. Guests were invited to the Walsh home, where the bride cut the wedding cake. The house was decorated with white roses, carnations, sweet peas and Easter lilies.

Following a short wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Garesche will make their home in Madison. The bride wore a dark blue dress with a matching hat and yellow coat for her going-away costume.

Mrs. Walsh was gowned in ashes of roses crepe with navy and turquoise accessories. The bridegroom's mother was in beige with a matching coat and a wine straw hat.

The bride is a graduate of the Maryville College of the Sacred Heart and received her master's degree in philosophy at St. Louis University. For the last three years she has been teaching at Maryville.

Mr. Garesche is a grandson of Mrs. Elizabeth FitzWilliam O'Brien, 5879 Clemens avenue, who attended the wedding. His uncle, Jules Garesche, and aunts, Miss Louise and Miss Lala, 37 Vandeventer place, also were present. The bridegroom is a graduate of St. Louis University.

Mrs. Owen was gowned in dark blue lace, floor-length, and wore orchids.

It Takes Only Two Weeks Or So for New Hat-Style Epidemic to Sweep U. S.

Many of the New Fashions Start in Colony Restaurant, New York, at Lunch Time.

By LUCIUS BEEBE

NEW YORK, April 3.

PROBABLY no single influence has so profound an effect on the headgear of American women as lunch at the Colony Restaurant. For this dazzling and super-costly resort is the source and fountainhead of nine out of ten of the hat styles which sooner or later will be retailing for three dollars in the Boston Stores, Smart Marts and Grand Bazaars of a thousand dusty towns strung all the way across the continent. The Colony is, of course, the most fashionable parade ground New York affords, and the moment one of its clientele has a new hat from the hands of Miss Jessica, Hattie Carnegie or Valentina she must hasten to luncheon de grande lux in the restaurant's elegant purlieus.

In a single day one can observe a mixed grill of celebrities such as Ina Claire, the Duchess of Marlborough, Hedda Hopper, Gloria Swanson, Lois Lang, Princess Khetto, Mikeladze, Mrs. Harrison Williams, Elsa Maxwell, Claire Booth Brokaw Luce, Margaret Pemberton, Clara Bell Walsh, Katharine Cornell and Mrs. Larry Tibbett, all sporting such skypieces of fur, feathers, flowers and foliage as to make the restaurant look like a photomontage of Mrs. S. Stanwood Menken appearing as the Spirit of Enchanted Dementia for the Beaux Arts Ball.

And in a score of couturiers' workrooms any original model that at 1:30 p. m. is poised over an almond souffle with wild raspberries by 3:30 is being duplicated for the retail trade. Alice Hughes, Peggy LeBoutillier, Gloria Braggiotti and scores of other fashion spies make a practice of lunching there three or four times a week and rushing back to their offices or typewriters with the details of all the latest styles hot off the Colony's solid platinum griddle. In a fortnight they're in the department stores at Ogden, Nev., and Fort Madison, Wis.

MANHATTAN'S FANCIER WINERS and diners put a flourishing period to their winter season last week at a series of dinners, during which the leading eatalls and tosspots of the community contrived to polish off what few plovers' eggs and jeroboams of champagne were left around the island.

The Wine and Food Society, of which Crosby Gaige is the founding and moving spirit (under the trans-Atlantic aegis of Andre Simon), has its final evening in the form of a Normandie dinner at the Ritz; the American Culinary Foundation, egged on and abetted by Les Amis d'Escoffier, gave a testimonial banquet for Selmer Fougner at the Astor, and the Wine and Food Society of Boston held its first dinner in the chaste purlieus of a private suite at the Copley Plaza, right in the shadow of S. S. Pierce, most famed of Yankee groceries, which supplied a good part of the menu and wine list.

Several Manhattan gourmets had themselves ferried over to Boston for the event, principally to observe how Calvin and Brillat Savarin hit it off together, and discovered that the residents of Back Bay were, in general, more reticent in their obeisance to Gasteria and that champagne went before the meal, instead of the noxious and stupefying sherry which the ultra-precious hereabouts have contrived to have substituted for honest cocktails on such occasions.

The Boston winers and diners, cheerily dressed in many cases in colored evening stocks and gold brocade dinner waistcoats, drank many double magnums without raising the audible level of the evening above a Park street pitch, but were visibly distressed by the presence of the press, a curious attitude, since their avowed mission is the dissemination of gustatory sweetness and light.

It appeared that last year's president had been photographed at a similar foregathering actually holding a cocktail glass in one hand and an olive in the other, an indelicate and outrageous invasion of Boston privacy tantamount, elsewhere in the world, to being photographed without trousers. "Isn't it too bad," one old lady was overheard to remark wistfully, "that there are no photographers here this time, so we could refuse to let them take any pictures!"

A BRISK BUT little known business which literally runs into millions every year, is the disposal of their loot by grateful but embarrassed recipients of gifts and testimonials when it is in the form of jewelry. Presentation watches, anniversary gifts from employes and organizations and costly wedding presents often represent sums which would be more appreciated in cash, and there is a tremendous field of exploitation among ladies of impermanent affections who receive vanloads of Cartier bracelets and diamonds and ruby clips from admirers of the moment. When the merchandise concerned is of a really precious and costly nature—anything from $1000 or so up—most of its passes through the vaults of a "distress merchandise" dealer in downtown Manhattan who is reputed to have enough funds at any moment to buy half the crown jewels of England if they should appear on the market. It is sold again to knowing purchasers at about half its original sale price, and all of it is above suspicion, either as to quality or source of origin.

THE firm has a reputation for integrity that never has been impeached, and it is this, combined with the circumstance that its prices cut theirs by 50 per cent, which drives Fifth avenue jewelers crazy. At the moment its salesmen can show you a platinum Cartier evening watch presented to a steel magnate by grateful associates and put back into circulation for the reason that he already had three or four like it.

The price is $350, but the original tag read nearer $1500. There is a heavy gold cigarette box from Van Cleef and Arpels, in Paris, with a wafer-thin catch of Cashmere sapphire that a multi-millionaire playboy gave his physician. His doctor had more use for cash, and this honey of a job, which must have cost 20,000 francs, is available for $300. They also will show you four matched square emeralds from a Tiffany bracelet that once adorned one of the loveliest misses who tripped around El Morocco last year. About $10,000 will take them, but her admirer, an Englishman of title, probably paid double that originally. Given a little time, this firm will find you anything you want short of the Hope diamond, and maybe even that.

BY THE TIME this gets into print what must certainly be the most elaborately decorated and one of the handsomest bars in town will have been opened in Dean Cornwall's new Raleigh Room at the Warwick Hotel. Having determined to design the decorations on heraldic patterns, Cornwall was seized by the notion that it would be more fascinating to Manhattanites if his

MY FRIEND EDWARD

• Intimate Glimpses of the Former King Revealed by an American Who Knew Him in the Night Clubs of Paris.

by JED KILEY

HE WAS once the King of England. You might have heard of him as the former Prince of Wales and you might have known of him as Edward VIII, King of England, but I knew him as plain Lord Chester.

For that reason I can't be accused of lese majeste when I tell of my friend Lord Chester. I've never been presented at the Court of St. James. In fact, I've never even been inside the gates of Buckingham Palace. Officially, I don't even know the man who was the King of England.

But unofficially I probably know him as well or better than any other American man. And he is one of the finest fellows I ever met.

"Lord Chester" is the name Edward used when incognito and when he was incognito the royal mask was off. During the many carefree hours I spent with him I never called him anything else. I never showed by word or sign that I knew his real identity.

I think this attitude of mine pleased him and it enabled me to discuss intimate subjects and ask him personal questions that I never could have asked him as H. R. H.

The question which is interesting the entire world now—when will the now Duke of Windsor marry Mrs. Simpson?—recalls a question I asked Lord Chester some years ago. He knew at that time that I was not married and of course we all knew he was not. He had just told me that he contemplated a trip to the United States in the near future and was looking forward to it principally because of his great liking for American girls.

"Why don't you marry an American girl?" I asked him suddenly.

He looked off into space in a way that he has. Then he smiled.

"Why don't you?" he said.

However, I couldn't help feeling that he always has had an idea in the back of his head that he might marry an American girl some day.

I'll never forget the first time I met him. I was the owner of a pretentious Montmartre night club at the time.

The visit of the then Prince of Wales was not entirely unexpected. I had been open about two weeks when Mrs. Charlie Munn, a beautiful and amusing Englishwoman married to a Philadelphian, and a woman who might have been the first Mrs. Simpson, if she hadn't loved Charlie, called me over to her table.

"Jed," she said, "I've simply got to have your band for my dinner party."

"Why?" I asked.

"The Prince of Wales is my guest at dinner and he asked for them," she answered.

"I'll let you have the band for nothing," I said, "providing you bring the Prince here after dinner."

"It's a bet," Mrs. Munn said.

The night of the dinner party arrived.

The Prince came in laughing, tossed a soft crush hat to the doorman, and immediately swung a tall, distinguished-looking girl onto the dance floor. I did not know who she was at the time, but knew her later as Lady Montbatten, related to the Royal family, and the possessor of a rare sense of humor.

THE PRINCE TOOK THE WORN TRENCHCOAT AND, SWINGING THE BATTERED CANE, WALKED OUT.

"I'd like to meet your friend," I said to Mrs. Munn.

She threw up her well-manicured hands in horror.

"Don't be silly," she said. "Don't you know that nobody can introduce a person to the Prince without his asking them?"

So I went out to the bar to have a drink and think it over. An Englishman there engaged me in conversation. I told him my troubles and he laughed.

"Go right over and talk to him," he said. "He will be glad to meet you."

The gentleman turned out to be Captain Trotter, the Prince's aide de camp and constant companion. So I took his advice. I walked over to the table and tapped the Prince on the shoulder. I had planned a pretty little speech on the way over, but here's what I actually said.

"Well, well, if it isn't Lord Chester," I mumbled. Then I explained in my best Oxford English, "I own the joint!"

I remember a bevy of shocked faces looking up at me, but the Prince jumped quickly to his feet and held out his hand.

"Hello, Kiley," he said affably. "Sit down and have a drink."

And the future King of England himself drew up a chair for me at his side. From that moment on, we were the best of friends.

—o-o—

ON the Prince's first visit to my night club something happened that has always been a mystery to me. I was sitting with him when he suddenly indicated a young American girl who was sitting alone at a table on the dance floor.

"Is that one of your dancing girls?" he asked me. He knew, like everybody else, that we had about 10 girls about the place who could be danced with by lonesome tourists, if properly approached.

"No, she isn't," I told him truthfully, and I repeated the story the girl had told me a few nights before. As far as I know, her story was true.

The doorman came in to me one night and explained that there was a very nice American girl outside who wished to speak to me. We had to be pretty particular about letting unescorted women in.

But this one the doorman said was different. And she was "different." I took one glance at her and invited her in. She was about 19 years old, very well dressed and rather pretty. In the light her eyes looked as though she had been crying.

Dabbing at her eyes, she told me her story. She was, she said, from Podunk, Ill. That's not the name of the small town, of course, but the State is correct. She had lived a sheltered life there with her parents all her life, but a few weeks before had run away to see Paris.

Suddenly she found herself alone with a big hotel bill and no money.

"I haven't eaten a bite in two days," she sobbed. And she looked it. So I ordered some onion soup for her, but I made a mental decision not to advance her any money. You can't be too sentimental in the night club business.

"Why don't you write home or see the American Consul?" I suggested.

"I'd rather die than do that," she said quickly. "Don't you understand that I had to lie to my family to get away? They think I am working in New York."

"Well," I said, "frankly, I don't know how else you are going to get back. I can't advance you any money."

"I don't want you to," she said, "I just want you to please allow me to come in here alone. Perhaps you could help me meet some nice man who will send me back. The only clothes I have are on my back. As you see, they are evening clothes, and I couldn't very well go around in the daytime."

The story sounded true. I felt sorry for the girl. I wound up by getting her a room in a little hotel around the corner and told the headwaiter to see that she got all the food she wanted.

And this was the girl the Prince had inquired about. I told him the story just as it happened and he seemed very much interested.

"Do you suppose she would dance with me?" he asked with his usual modesty.

"I don't know," I said, "but if you like I will ask her."

"Please do," he said.

I walked over to her table and I'll never forget the look of consternation in her eyes when I told her that the Prince wanted to dance with her. She got so fussed, she knocked her glass over.

"Take it easy," I advised. "He is a swell fellow and whatever you do don't try to put on airs. Just be natural. You said you wanted to meet some nice man and here he is. I don't know any nicer."

Then as the music started I brought the Prince over.

"This is Lord Chester," I said. I didn't know her name, so that's as far as I could go with an introduction. Incidentally, it seems that I violated court etiquette in going that far, but the Prince didn't seem to mind. He danced three dances straight with her. Every eye in the place was on them. The beads of perspiration stood out on her forehead like raindrops, and she was tripping and stumbling like a three-year-old taking her first dancing lesson. Between the dances he sat at the table with her in earnest conversation.

When he finally got back to his own table, I noticed that she had gone. The headwaiter told me that she had hurried out immediately after dancing, and that she was crying again.

When she didn't come back the next night, I dropped over to her hotel. I was worried about her. You can't tell what a young girl in such a despondent mood might do.

But the concierge of the hotel told me that she had paid her bill and had gone.

And then one day I got a postcard. It was written in a girlish hand and unsigned. All it said was:

"Thanks ever so much. You are a Prince, too."

I looked at the postmark. It was "Podunk, Ill."

Well, you can draw your own conclusions. I've drawn mine.

—o-o—

EDWARD has the typically English easy-going manner, but his mind works very fast when he wants it to. He gave me a good example of it one early morning in Montmartre. I noticed him standing in front of the cloak room searching through his pockets. He had lost his coat check and suggested that he be allowed to enter the cloak room to pick out his things. By that time I knew him pretty

THE AUTHOR—By FLOYD GIBBONS

HELLO EVERYBODY:—And let me tell you about Jed Kiley, the subject of this blurb. Of course if you've ever been to Paris you know all about Jed. He lived there 12 years, was "the best known American in Paris," and called Kings and Queens by their first names. Almost every girl in France, from princesses to midenettes were running after Jed and he had the finest wardrobe on the continent.

Jed can do anything. And he does. For the fun of it. He can write when he wants to. But he seldom wants to. Sinclair Lewis says he is "a sheep in wolf's clothing." O. O. McIntyre says he is "a poet in the guise of an inn-keeper." Frazier Hunt refers to him as "that Amazing American."

Everybody likes him. You can't help it. I like him except when I'm with my best gal. A gentleman once known as Edward VIII liked him too. I've seen them together. And if anybody knows Edward "with his hair down" Jed does.

But don't let Jed Kiley kid you. His real name is "Gerald"!

"The Complex Of Inferiority Is Merely Fear"

We All Have It, Says Columnist in Answer to an Inquiring Girl.

By Elsie Robinson

SHE'S young—19. Bewildered. All tangled up with herself. Because somebody has said she has "an inferiority complex," and "will never amount to anything until she gets over it." So won't I tell her just what an inferiority complex is—please?

What's an inferiority complex? It's fear, child. Just fear.

Be still. Very still. Listen. Listen deep and deeper to the voices of yourself, to all the cries and shouts, whines and snarls, whispers, songs and prayers that are going on inside yourself.

Many voices, aren't there? Many cries. Not actual words, perhaps. But they shout their challenge—sob their confession—and are heard, as truly, by the watching world.

Now listen deeper still. Under all the other voices—the passing, changing voices of your joy or anger, delight or despair, pride or shame—there is one voice which never stops, never changes. That is the voice of FEAR.

—o-o—

DEEP DOWN in every human heart there is always fear. Fear of the world without you; fear of the weakness within you. Fear of the people you must meet and the things you must do. Fear of life itself, stretching on and on before you—so vast, so beautiful, yet so terrible and mysterious.

Deep, deep down in your heart, little girl, there is fear. That is why you feel so mixed up. That is why you laugh one moment—cry the next. That is why you are suddenly seized with loneliness, even at the happiest times . . . why you feel indifferent, defeated, just when things are going best.

What is an inferiority complex? That is what it is—FEAR. The voice of fear, speaking deep inside you. Speaking deep inside EVERYONE. For you are not the only one who has an inferiority complex, child. We all have it. But don't believe them when they say that you "will never amount to anything until you get over it." Don't give up because there is fear in. you . . . nor hate yourself . . . nor lose faith in yourself . . . nor even try to "get over" that deep fear.

Be glad, instead! Be proud of that "inferiority complex!"

Be grateful because there is something in you which is never satisfied with what you have done . . . Never content . . . something which is always reaching out for more courage and beauty and kindness and truth!

—o-o—

DO NOT SAY to yourself, "There is no use fighting; I'm licked already, for I have an inferiority complex."

Say, instead, "I will fight harder than ever! I will believe in myself harder than ever. For I have proof within me that I am worth fighting for! I have proof that I am meant to be something fine, do something noble. This fear in me is the proof!

"This fear that goads me on and on is not a base thing. It is a sacred thing. It is the most powerful and precious thing in all my life. It is the voice of my own soul crying out for goodness . . It is the voice of God!

"I will not be ashamed of the fear in me. I will listen to it. I will be guided by it and work for it. I will follow it out of the darkness . . . up and up . . . on and on . . home to God!

Color Alliance

The alliance of deep pink and turquoise blue is a feminine one which fits into the present scheme of fashions and appeals for boudoirs as well as for clothes. Shops are displaying accessories that present this interesting color alliance, their suggestions ranging from vanity items and lamps to complete ensembles such as bedspread and curtains. Even kitchens and bathrooms are being decorated in the two-tone theme; so it isn't unusual to see pink ducks sailing along the bathroom wall on bright blue paper or blue flowers blooming in the kitchen on a pink background.

New Make-Up Vogue

Dramatic effects in make-up are disappearing. Instead of the look of painted masks faces are adopting a rosy radiance. The vogue in cosmetics turns toward a pink and white complexion. A Dresden china doll with its fragile face is the model for 1937 beauty. Lighter tones of lipstick, a faintly pink rouge which suggests blushing cheeks, natural tones of powder and very light eye shadows represent the smartest contributions to a fashionable complexion.

MY OPINION
by Martha Carr

Dear Mrs. Carr:

EVER since I came to this country and could read English I have read your column, though this is the first time I have come to you for help.

When I left the Old Country I was a mere child, today I am 19 and quite mature for my age. I left a very dear boy behind over there. Many times he told me how he cared for me; then came the change in our lives. All through the years he wrote affectionate letters, saying there was no other girl he could love. I wanted him to come to America; that he will not do because he has a very fine position. I know I can never forget him; but it does me no good.

Now I have grown very shy. I am a senior in high school and am in the upper third in my classes. My teachers like me and I am at home with grown-ups and my girl friends I keep, though slow to make friends.

But boys never date me. I am tongue-tied in their presence. I know I am not pretty, but I am well-groomed. I do not care to dance. My English is far from perfect and I am afraid I will say the wrong thing as I speak with a noticeable accent. But I long very much for the companionship of a boy.

May God bless you always! CARMEN L.

You should not feel strange in your adopted country now. Think how largely America is made up of foreign-speaking people. As a matter of fact, cultivated persons are rather interested in a foreign accent; and often women who have this are piquant and attractive. If those at school make you conscious of it, they may not have any feeling about it; the unusualness of it just attracts their attention, and they are not sophisticated enough to keep from showing it.

You must not allow self-consciousness to mar your comfort and you must do as any other girl is expected to do; show interest in outside matters, read what others are reading, adapt yourself to the sports they enjoy and show a little curiosity in what interests them. And, whether or not you enjoy it, learn to dance and be alert. You are too serious about conversation, and why not regard boy friends, as you do girl friends, as pals and partners? Romance will follow on the trail of these things if you do not always turn inward for approval and happiness.

If you would like my little folder, "Popularity," you may have it if you will send the usual self-stamped, self-addressed envelope.

My Dear Mrs. Carr:

● COULD YOU TELL ME where I could get some information about becoming a G-woman? Also, could you give me the names of the ocean liners where I could put in an application for nurse on one of these boats? H. B.

You may find the first information at the Federal Bureau of Investigation, 1114 Market street, the Federal building. If you want a position as nurse on an ocean liner, I would advise you to go to the offices of American or United States owned lines. Employes on foreign ships are usually those of the nationality to which the foreign ships belong.

My Dear Mrs. Carr:

WILL YOU ASK in your column if anyone has an extra Bible dictionary? I find in studying the Bible there are words I do not know. I am unable to buy one. I shall be more than grateful. RUSSELL T.

My Dear Mrs. Carr:

● I HAVE BEEN READING your column for some time and have decided to ask for information. Could you tell me where I should go to have my name changed or made legal? I have been using the name of my foster-parents for 16 years (my own father never having done anything for me since I was 4). I have never been adopted. Have I the right to continue use of the name? I am now 20 years old and would like to have this settled. Will I have to consult my own father?

Thanking you for this information, I am ANON.

If you wish to continue using this name you should go, with your foster-father, to the Circuit Court and have legal adoption papers made out; or ask how you can adopt this name legally. If you cannot employ a lawyer, you will be able to secure information and help at the Legal Aid Bureau, before applying to the court.

My Dear Mrs. Carr:

MY SISTER is 16 years old and much too young to lead the life she does. On Saturday night, for instance, she goes to taverns and stays until 2 and 3 o'clock. She and another girl go 12 miles to another town Sunday afternoon, hitchhiking if they have no other way.

My mother has almost despaired. The girl does not help her at all (I am married and live away from home) and resents being asked to do so. She graduates from grade school next month and there will be little use trying to get her to go to high school. I feel that I should not interfere, but must do my utmost to help her and to help my mother. Have you, by any chance, a solution for this? PUZZLED.

Create a new interest for the child if there is any way possible to do it. Is there any kind of group interest for girls in your neighborhood? Does she like flowers or animals? Could you get some of her friends together and have them learn to do things My "Occupations for Women" may serve in choosing new interests for her there in the country or small town.

If you have not had the advice of a physician about her mental condition; he may find that her nerves are not in stable condition and she may not be well-nourished. Subscribe for a magazine or two for her, and so that she may look forward to some of her evenings with them and try to plan a little normal amusement or a party occasionally at home.

As a last resort, it may be necessary to get her out of the environment in which she has lived, and there are girls' homes and summer camps to which she can go for a few weeks, that may reveal more to her in normal living among girls than she has ever known.

THE WORLD AS WOMEN SEE IT

TECHNIQUE of LANDING YOUR MAN

One Woman's Idea of the Proper Method Along This Line Is Revealed in a Current Book.

By Virginia Irwin

IN view of the fact that the female of the species has been pretty successful at getting her man ever since the dear old days of Adam and Eve, it's hard to explain why girls still need advice on the subject. You'd think, by this time, there'd be something like the multiplication table that they could learn in school that would make snaring a husband as easy as adding up the grocery bill after a course in calculus.

And you'd think, too, with all the experience the daughters of Eve have had down through the centuries in dealing with husbands after marriage that there would be a nice little indexed volume—something like the dictionary—to which they could turn for the answer to any knotty problem such as what to do when friend hubby refuses to eat rhubarb. You'd think time would have taken care of all this. But it hasn't. What the girls still want to know is how to get a man and how to hold on to him after they get him.

In Anne Hirst's new book—"Get Your Man—and Hold Him" (H. C. Kinsey & Company, Inc., publishers)—the girls may find some help. For years Anne has been dishing out advice to the lovelorn through a column in a New York paper, and now in book form she has given her ideas on what to do from the moment you find yourself saying, "That's the man I want!" right through to the bitter end when you find yourself face to face with the problem of holding him—away from another woman.

But to begin with that first meeting—as Miss Hirst does in her first chapter.

"Here he stands," she says, "just across the room from you, the handsomest man at the party—the man you have always hoped you'd meet.

"Here you are, with all the years behind you making just a background for this moment. You see stars. Your heart stands still. You're dancing on the edge of the moon. All the words of all the popular songs are true about you now.

"What can you do to attract him?

"Actually, in this first moment, your background is the only real thing you have to depend upon. How you look—as to beauty, health, expression, taste in dress, and that intangible something that we call inner fire—all these factors work together to bring him across the room to your side."

And now that she has the man "across the room to your side" she launches into the meat of the business. She says if you have "let yourself develop into a frump, physically or mentally," you've met the moment where you begin to regret your frumpiness the rest of your life. You'll wish that you'd had sense enough to go to bed at some reasonable hour the night before so that now your eyes would be shining, that you had given yourself a manicure before you started out for the evening and that you had had ambition enough to formulate some opinion on what ought to be done about the Supreme Court. If you haven't done all these things, begin over and maybe you'll get a second chance.

At first meetings Miss Hurst suggests that "it is a good idea to establish the impression that you are that much abused and berated creature—a lady."

"Of course," she points out, "the best way to achieve this is actually to be one." And in case you're slightly befuddled as to what a "lady" is, Anne describes her for you.

"A lady," she says, "may let slip from her mildly rouged lips a dainty damn, but not on first acquaintance and generally not where she is likely to be overheard.

"She doesn't choke the new young man with her 'cuicha' or her breeding, but the way she slips into her coat shows that she's been used to having a gentleman help her with it.

"A lady today doesn't flounce out of the room when an off-color story is told. She listens considerately, mindful of the feelings of the teller and the company. But she—oh, so seldom—tells one herself.

"She smokes or not, and drinks or not, according to the customs of her upbringing; but she does both, if at all, in moderation and with a certain air of daintiness. She would no more think of excess in these matters than she would at table—and impeccable manners at table are, of course, one of the accepted rudiments of a girl's training."

—o—o—

AND now that you have some idea of what a "lady" is and that being one has presumably landed you your first date with the guy who made you weak in the knees the minute you saw him, Miss Hirst asks:

"What can you do? Can you dance? Play tennis? Golf? How's your bridge? The more of these you master the more popular you'll be. Many a girl has met her future husband at a football game or across a bridge table, when she's been asked to fill in only because her hostess knew she'd talk the same language. If you are handicapped so that you cannot actually participate in certain games, then learn the rules, scores, players and other seasonal details so you can at least talk intelligently about them. In other words, read the daily newspapers, especially the sport pages.

"You have to have something to give, you know, or why should any one invite you the second time? You can't go through life just 'being' and expect the world to be grateful. You may try just being ornamental, but you won't last long at that; even men grow tired "of pretty faces when there's nothing behind them. you've got to 'do' something, 'be' something, to make the world stop in its wild whirl to notice you."

Now we're up to the stage where you have been monopolized by your hero for months, but he still hasn't got around to suggesting that his idea of heaven would be a bungalow in the suburbs with roses vining over the door and you in a house dress baking a batch of beans for dinner. You know he loves you, but so far he hasn't made a move to steer you into a jewelry store to get your ring finger measured for a sparkler. If you find yourself in such a state, Miss Hirst suggests that you invent a couple of boy friends, if you haven't any real ones, and make your hero believe that he's got a little competition for your hand and heart.

"If he is the playboy type, you'll have to determine what your part is going to be and stick to it," the author warns. "Either outplay him, run circles around him, be gayer and brighter than he is—or else be a wren from start to finish.

"It isn't hard to analyze the man you're in love with, if you'll only keep your head. When you're not with him, study him as though he were a bug on a pin. Give him the advantage and the compliment of your most serious attention—which he should be giving you but isn't."

And after you've got your man—you will still have to study him as though he were a bug on a pin. Don't think you can just sit down and get yourself supported in style, with nary a thought but that you won in the preliminary skirmish; your job has just begun.

"First," counsels our adviser to the new bride, "you must study this man of yours; find out what sort of perfection he wants in his wife, for the perfect wife is as diversified as the natures of the marrying men of the world. Does he want of you first, to be an audience—the star of a larger audience before whom he can tell funny stories, be the center of all attention, lapping up applause?"

If you think your man is the type who dotes on continuous spontaneous appreciation (and most men do), your job is to tell him 24 hours a day, by word plus gesture, what a clever soul he is. You'll have to listen to the same bum jokes and beam upon him in your best imitation of somebody overcome in the presence of the world's greatest humorist.

IN the matter of feeding the brute, Miss Hirst counsels:

"A man has the right to expect the food he prefers served in his own home, and it is your business to see that he gets it. But there is one danger in getting too excited about feeding and housing your husband to his liking. It is the danger that the woman who calls herself the perfect wife makes. It gets—oh, so easily—to be an obsession. You think about today's meals the minute you awake, you go to bed planning tomorrow's menus; the first thing you know, you spend the dinner hour complaining about the price of chickens, and you greet your husband at the door with 'That gas stove has got to be fixed—the oven doesn't heat!'

"No man wants to hear about such details. They belong in your department of the marriage contract. For heaven's sake, keep them there. If the oven doesn't heat, telephone the gas or electric company and have it fixed. If chickens are high, serve a ham and forget about it. Time enough when your husband complains about his dinner to go into the unwelcome details."

A few other things that Anne advises against, if you would hold your man, are: Don't pick up the Sunday papers when he strews them about the living room floor; let him wade through them all day Sunday if he wants to and then remove the debris on Monday when he's at his office. Don't take the part of the injured little woman if your husband insists on handling the family finances; after you've demonstrated that you're a capable manager, he'll be glad to be relieved of the job of looking after the bills. Don't let mother-in-law trouble get you down; treat his mother like an honored guest instead of an unwelcome pest and you'll soon find her making room for you in her heart.

And, among other things, Miss Hirst counsels: "When your husband wants a night off, don't dissolve in tears and declare he doesn't love you any more.

"Men are gregarious. They like variety. If you don't give it to them, they'll get it, anyhow. How much more womanly, and wise, to suggest now and then that he spend an evening playing poker or indulging some other hobby, than to freeze up and make your husband feel like a thief because he wants to get away from home for a few hours!"

On the night your husband plays poker with the boys, the thing for you to do is look up your old girl friends, let down your back hair, and have a nice old-fashioned gabfest about how to get a man and hold him.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN

By Dorothy Coleman

NOT SO many days ago there arrived in St. Louis with her husband, a black-eyed little Australian woman, Mrs. Lucius Conolly by name. Mrs. Conolly is accompanying her husband on a motor trip almost around the world in the interests of international highway development, and getting a huge kick out of it. We had a talk with her, and with the assistance of a small globe found out exactly where they had been.

Mr. and Mrs. Conolly started out just about a year ago from Australia, crossed to the island of Java, then to Singapore and motored up through Malaya, Siam and French Indo-China to the Chinese border. They were warned not to go farther by road because the country was overrrun by bandits, so they shipped themselves and their little car around through the South China Sea to Hongkong. Mrs. Conolly told about a pirate guard of Chinese soldiers aboard, and about the iron bars that shut off the first class passengers from the steerage. Pirates have a habit of almost always planting their accomplices among the lower-class passengers.

AFTER FURTHER jaunts in China, a 2000-mile excursion in Japan and some sight-seeing on what used to be the Korean peninsula, the pair sold their car and boarded a trans-Siberian train for Moscow. For eight days and eight nights they shared a four-berth compartment with two Russian men, and subsisted on "perfectly appalling" food. Siberia is not the gloomy country she had imagined, said Mrs. Conolly. There were bands of dejected natives squatting on bundles of their goods at stations where the train never stops, but the brightness of wild flowers through the prairies offset the sordidness of that picture.

Mr. and Mrs. Conolly have been seeing America from coast to coast in a station wagon, which, incidentally, the British call "shooting breaks" and consider "very social," because they are used to carry guns out to the bird country. In Africa they're "safari wagons."

Mrs. Conolly was with her husband about five years ago when he was the first man, as far as they know, to drive a car through Africa from southernmost tip to the north coast, a trip which took them eight months. Mrs. Conolly's job is to keep the diary and look after the filing of numerous photographs which he takes. Sometimes she relieves him at the wheel. And she knows how to do her bit when they have to pitch camp for themselves. That was practically every night on the African tour. And the other night a woman in a trailer next to theirs at an auto camp was grumbling because she had had to camp out for a whole week in the wilds of America!

UNABLE TO articulate in prose the feeling aroused in us by Easter-style plates for dogs we have turned to verse of a sort (And we didn't say doggerel):

Oh, for the life of a Rover,
Of Nicot, of Sparky, or Dan;
His term as an outcast is over,
He's fit for the finest divan.
His tailleur is perfect, his grooming superb,
His wardrobe would rival a king's.
From morning to night he's a constant delight
In his overcoat, rubbers and things.
I could do with a surtout of Scotch plaid myself,
And a girdle of braided calfskin.
As for p. j.'s of toweling, pastel in their tone,
With a down-the-back zipper and frills—
Well, if someone would promise me
Such pretties honestly—
I wouldn't have them.

Capitalizing Your Talents

BY MARJORIE HILLIS

WE'RE coming towards a time of year when a whole crop of girls will be getting out of college and looking for jobs—and wondering what jobs to look for. They'll ask a lot of serious questions about what fields are not over-crowded, and what type of work pays best, and in which directions women can go farthest. But only now and then will a girl be wise enough to let one thing only influence her decision—what she herself is fitted to do best.

I heard an editor of a fashion magazine say, the other day, that when she was a little girl she was considered very good because she sat so still in church and wherever older people were present. But, she said, the reason wasn't actually goodness—she was having a marvelous time, all by herself, redressing the older people. She would first plan what she would do if she could take down their hair and do it up again to suit their faces. Then she would undress them, mentally, and start from scratch. The women might have been startled if the results could have been visible, but the little girl enjoyed it thoroughly. And she went right on redressing people, in a sense, when she took up a career that has been enormously successful. It was the thing for which she had a special gift.

Another woman wrote me recently that she likes cutting out clothes from patterns and can adapt patterns to fit various figures., so she does it for her neighbors. Here is something that might well be turned into a small business in a community where women sew at home.

It is the women who have wit enough to capitalize their own talents who are apt to get on the best. Women like those who started the first tearooms, and some of the early interior decorating shops, and individual candy stores.

If you're wondering what to do for a living, why not think what you can do, and do well, and what you would enjoy doing? It may not seem like a practical asset at first—but a lot of women have turned improbable talents into thriving businesses.

—o—o—

I SUPPOSE everyone feels a possessive pride about a book he has discovered for himself. I have always felt that way about "Peter Ibbetson," which I came on during my teens, one summer at a girl's camp in Maine. The village church was near the camp and it had a small library to which we were given a key. Browsing there one dull day, I picked up "Peter Ibbetson" (I can't imagine why I had never heard of it, but I hadn't) and started to read. And there I sat, in the musty little room, entranced and spellbound, through a long summer afternoon.

Afterwards, I was torn between disappointment that every one else seemed to have read it before me, and pride because I had known a masterpiece when I saw one.

I can't claim to have discovered "Lost Horizon," because it was my brother who brought it to me, but I did read it a year or two before all the world began talking about it, which gives me at least a little of the possessive feeling. That same brother (I think he smells good reading; he never seems to miss any) had been a Hilton fan for several years, but it took "Lost Horizon" to win me over.

There is something so completely fascinating about the idea of living, in good health and with all one's faculties, for a couple of hundred years! One can't possibly hope to do a quarter of the things one wants to do in an ordinary lifetime, but one could at least get a good start in 200 years! And Mr. Hilton's theory of moderation seems so perfectly reasonable as one reads about it. Perhaps we could live on and on if we didn't wear ourselves out with too much work and play and food and drink and general excitement. It's a tantalizing thought—tantalizing because I'm sure none of us will get around to investigating it before it's too late.

ALL THIS is brought on by my recent attendance at the picture "Lost Horizon." I went with fear and trembling — I couldn't bear the thought of Shangra-La done over to Hollywood taste. But it isn't, except perhaps a very little, now and then, in one or two of the lamasery rooms, which do seem pretty modernistic. (But come to think about it, there is something similar about the monastic and modernistic styles of decoration.)

If you feel about "Lost Horizon" as I do, you will be distinctly relieved to find that Mr. Capra has taken very few liberties with the story. There is the exciting airplane flight, when the five passengers discover themselves to be in the hands of a strange Mongolian pilot, flying over wild country of snowy mountain peaks, amazingly and beautifully photographed. There is the arrival of the men from the lamasery, exactly as in the book, and the difficult climb back. And, finally, there is Shangra-La itself just as it should be—an incredible building hung on the edge of a cliff, with the fertile valley below.

After that, you can settle back and know that everything is going to be all right in Capra's hands. And at the end of the picture, as at the end of the book, you'll find yourself wondering if it really is all fiction; if perhaps Hilton hadn't heard of some far-away place where lamas live long and lovely lives of moderation and no one has any worries. I wondered, not merely that, but whether—if he had—I couldn't find out about it and go there, too.

ON BROADWAY with Walter Winchell

NOEL COWARD, who is smart enough to run for cover (when his health is threatened) wrote these words for his book, "Present Indicative," his very readable autobiog...He wrote it after he was lionized for a season in New York, to-wit: "People were greedy and predatory, and if you gave them the chance they would steal unscrupulously the heart and soul out of you without really wanting to or even meaning to. A little extra personality; a publicized name; a little entertainment value above the average; and there they were, snatching and grabbing, clamorous in their demands, draining your strength to add a little fuel to their social bonfires. Then when the time came when you were tired, no longer quite so resilient, you were pushed back into the shadows, consigned to the dust and left to moulder in the box-room like a hat no longer fashionable."

NOEL COWARD

And the people Coward means, when they read that, will bellow that he is being ungrateful for their hospitality—ungrateful, in short, for his X-ray eyes—in seeing all the way through them. Clap hands.

CLOSE-UP of ST. LOUIS FASHIONS

STYLE-SMILES

By GRETCHEN

"YES, HE DOES LOOK LIKE YOUR HUSBAND, BUT I WOULDN'T WORRY ABOUT IT."

Really, your optimism is unshakable once you're fitted in a cape costume as dashing as this. Its spongy angora woolen is light as it's smooth and soft. Above a slim navy skirt, an overblouse and cape checkered in navy and white. Two stiffened navy ribbons stand sentinel at the back of a green pillbox, round as a tambourine. Hook two white pompons at your throat, and you're all set to saunter proudly down any avenue of fashion.

Every Type of Spring Outfit Has Its Cape

This Garment Adds Youthful and Dashing Emphasis to Wardrobe.

CHOOSE a cape if you would add a youthful and dashing emphasis to your spring wardrobe, but don't expect it to see indefinte service. Capes come quickly and disappear as quickly, but they contribute plenty of zest while they're here.

Every type of ensemble has its cape this season with the result that a smartly dressed woman can appear in a cape outfit from one morning until the wee hours of the next. Designed for wear over colorful sports clothes are cape toppers made of novelty patterned woolens. Some of them are knee length and others reach only to the finger tips. They may be part of a complete three-piece suit or purchased separately.

The tailored cape is made of a feathery woolen, a covert material or one of those old-fashioned twills that have returned to popularity. It may add braid trimming or a fur collar or be completely plain. For afternoon many of the season's capes are featured as part of ensembles. A typical one of navy sheer material is finger-tip length and lined with a bright print to match the trimming of the frock. When the owner feels very gay she will wear the printed side out.

Evening capes are made of almost any popular material from summer velvet to chiffon. Those that are created primarily as wraps are of the heavier materials and may be long or short. Sheer capes designed along picturesque lines are very chic this spring to complement sheer frocks. Many of them are cut so that they may be wrapped about the figure in a dramatic manner as well as draped loosely about the shoulders.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

NEW YORK, April 3.

FOR some time I have been wondering just when the parental worms would turn upon some of the more "modern" forms of education now in vogue in many public schools. The first attack of this type now has been launched by several hundred parents in the fine old town of Roslyn, Long Island. They have circulated and signed a petition demanding a return to the fundamental three R's of the little red schoolhouse—and stop this new-fangled nonsense!

These embattled citizens, led by Town Clerk Mortimer H. Conklin, charge that such educational foundation stones as readin', writin', 'rithmetic, spellin' and history have been comparatively neglected in favor of more high-falutin' psychological "activities and projects," as the pedagogues call them. They further allege that their youngsters are no long given home work—so helpful in keeping the youngsters off the streets and out of mischief. And placid Roslyn is in a nervous and high-strung state, I tell you!

Frederick Wegner, superintendent of schools, has rallied to the defense of the present educational methods, saying that his charges have no difficulty in breaking into high school and college, and that his ways are those now used by all modern American elementary schools.

This is a live controversial subject everywhere, I don't doubt. Countless thousands of dads and mothers must feel that what was good enough for them is good enough for their offspring. And perhaps the modernization of elementary book larnin' has gone a bit daffy in spots. I imagine that the proper dose for the kids is a happy medium somewhere between the old and the new. Meanwhile, the Battle of Roslyn rages on! It's an interesting test case!

ABOUT THIS TIME each annum we New York girls get spring well up our nostrils and begin thinking about the birds and the bees and the flowers—especially about the dear little flower.

But we are sharply divided on the subject of the posies, according to our various habitats. Our suburbanites, the garden light in their eyes, are crowding the seed stores in search of the proper ingredients for the back yard plot and the borders for the front lawn. We Manhattanites, on the other hand, are hardly aware that flowers emerge from the soil. We imagine that they sprout from the skulls of smart ladies to decorate their hair-do's, or spring in full bloom from belts, shoulders and lapels.

Thus my flower consciousness drives me at once to beauteous blonde Irene Hayes, who functions as our leading flower stylist in her Park Avenue Orchid-Shoppe. I say "Well, Irene old posy-monger, what's blossoming this spring on heads and frocks?" And Irene tells me.

Tells me, this week, that flowers for the hair are still very chic, especially small yellow and white orchids. That carnations, bright red or pink, are just the thing to tuck in dress-girdles this season. That the men-folks still stick to cornflower boutonnieres for day, but consider the deep red carnation the thing to liven up somber evening wear. Fresh flowers are growing in popularity as hat ornaments, too, adroitly tied up with the costume.

Irene has a new flower from South Africa called—take a breath—the Chinkerinchee, the hardiest of all cut blooms. Takes three weeks to arrive; will last three more. All right, Irene, but I still intend to see a flower growing right out of the ground this spring, if I can find one.

CULTURE RAGES, now and then, among our night-club girls. Now a sorority of these girls who are also college graduates has been formed under the presidency of Harriet Brent, Hunter, '36 and called Gamma Nu. Harriet prances at the Hotel Piccadilly. Its purpose, she tells me, is "to elevate the morals and intelligence of ngiht-club entertainment." Pardon me briefly while I enjoy a small snicker. I want to see Harriet entertaining a tired business man with her morals and intelligence!

Speaking of these nocturnal babies, Heloise Martin, who got all that weird publicity out at Drake in Des Mones, is already back on Broadway, kicking up at the Hollywood Restaurant at $60 the seven days. Not much money for all that space in some papers!

MY PET domestic brawl of the spring was that enjoyed by the Edward Fagans of Yonkers. He came home at 2 a. m. and asked her for a kind loan of 50 cents. On being refused, he kept Mary up half the night demanding the half dollar, and the whole thing ended in a slapping bee, with Eddie finally marched off to the bastille. My goodness, how he must have needed those four bits, is my thought on the matter. What on earth for?

was the passing around of a box of cigars. We took one, smelled it in the approved manner, and jammed it into a purse to save for some deserving male. So did all the other girls, to the disgust of the men down the row. Serves the management right for not providing cigarettes in the first place.

REMEMBER WHEN you used to slip an extra licorice baby in your pinafore pocket to take home from parties? It gets to be as bad a habit as biting fingernails, but we're still doing it. There's something about a well-stocked tea table that brings out the kleptomaniac in us. We rationalize the impulse by recalling how terrible left-over party food would taste to the hostess the next day. At an Easter party the other afternoon we made off with a couple of gummy yellow chickens and a spun-sugar rabbit, just a little one that we could wrap conveniently in a handkerchief.

Hostesses, we've found, are usually pretty decent about the pilferings if they happen to catch you in the act, consider it almost flattering that you want little sister to know by a memento what a lovely party it was.

HOTELS WOULD probably not be so white about it. It was just luck that the maitre de didn't see what we saw one day in a dining room. A dowager guest, wrapped in pearls and furs, had finished a late and extensive breakfast. But there was still a roll or two on the table. She sent the waiter off for the check, then gently eased a crescent into her handsome petit point bag.

SPEAKING OF hotels and sech, we had cocktails the other day with a West End manager, who revealed to us that the chief reason the hotel goes in for the kind of light-opera floor shows they've been having lately, is an economic one. Romanticist that we are, we wanted to think that it was because the customers warm up quicker to a lilting Viennese waltz done in ruffles and magenta tailcoats than they do to noisy, undressed hot-cha.

But the truth of the matter is that the higher type of entertainment attracts a crowd that has more money and parts with it more readily. The guests get to feeling kind of expansive and mellow with music, and the first thing they know they've ordered up a magnum of champagne instead of another jigger of gin.

To our scrapbook of oddments we also add a note about Thursday nights. Thursday nights aren't what they used to be to the restaurateurs and innkeepers. It used to be that when cook went out so did the family, and public eating places did a flourishing business. But not any more; there are at least five national programs—favorite ones—coming over the air that night, and so many families would rather stay at home than miss one of them that eating houses are feeling the pinch. Full of unpredictables—this hotel business.

REDINGOTE COSTUME BEST FOR SPRING WEATHER HERE

IF you can't decide what type of costume is best for wear during the first warm spring days in St. Louis forget about all of the other fashion ideas and concentrate upon a redingote. There's no style of wrap which gives more service than this one and no weight quite so suitable for St. Louis weather.

Coats of the redingote type may be purchased as separate items or may be chosen as part of a complete ensemble. What you pay for one depends upon your shopping activities and upon your pocketbook. There are unlined coats of the full length fitted style which are available in good wool materials for less than the price of a frock while there are expensive models which show by their exquisite tailoring and the careful finish of the seams that an absence of lining has nothing to do with their cost.

One model that is inexpensively priced buttons straight up the front and wraps sufficiently that the frock underneath does not show. It has a little rolling collar and crescent-shaped pockets. Another which gives greater attention to the frock has the skirt section cut away across the front for several inches at either side. Among the models which are sold with accompanying printed frocks is a good-looking coat that ties at the front of the waistline. A back panel extends from shoulders to waistline, ending with a point to give the coat a long-waisted effect.

In addition to the variety of redingotes made of light weight wool fabrics are many of printed materials. One that has been designed for afternoon wear has shirring at the neckline and the waistline where it ties rather than buttons. Sleeves are elbow length. Another created primarily for spectator sportswear but offering tailored coverage for general summer wear is of printed linen which shows a multi-colored design on a white background.

MATCH YOUR HANDBAG to footwear if you would have your accessories do the most for your spring costume. The alliance is more important and effective this season than the union of matching bag and gloves, gloves and footwear or hat and bag. The two may contrast in shade with the suit, frock or coat or they may follow its color trend.

Patent leather, dull leathers, gabardines and novelty fabrics are all appropriate for the alliance of matching bag and shoes. The increased vogue of black and navy patent leather this spring makes it possible to choose an accessory ensemble which can be worn attractively with several different costumes. Black patent, for example, is being used this season with navy blue, beige and gray as well as with black and with printed fabrics.

The relationship between shoes and bags that are made of dull leathers or gabardines is apparent in the design of the two items as it is in the color. Trimmings of contrasting leather, perforations or stitching will harmonize so that everyone knows the wearer has chosen them together. The vogue of multicolored themes in footwear and bags is of significance and becoming more popular as the season advances. Cotton, synthetic and silk prints are being employed in the presentation of these ensembles, the choice depending upon the occasion. Woven materials that combine several different shades also are coming into fashion.

Bag styles show a preference for the satchel type which is comparatively large. A stiff bottom that is quite wide is a feature of most bags although they are made of pliable leathers or materials. Patent leathers, by the way, are as soft as doeskin this season and are presented in a variety of brilliant colors as well as the ever popular black and navy.

The same type of alliance which has been made between bags and shoes is apparent between gloves and hosiery. Note the most attractive costumes and you will see they harmonize and that beige is the favorite shade.

New Hemline Trend

THERE'S a new hemline trend which gives a novel, if not always becoming angle to the spring silhouette. The redingote type of coat reveals it most successfully by swinging upward across the front to permit the dress to show, or being cut several inches shorter than the dress all the way around. Both lines are regarded as newer than the cutaway front treatment which reveals a vertical strip of the skirt.

FIGHTING BUGS IN GARDEN

By Harriet W. Chandler

GARDEN pests we seem always to have with us, demanding vigilant care to keep under control. But with years of experience back of us, and newly discovered methods of attack coming to light each year, there is no reason why flower lovers should not win the battle for a clean, healthy garden. Watch for the pests early, for you may be sure if there is a bug in the neighborhood it will visit your garden before the season is over.

A good clean-up at this time will go far toward eradicating eggs of last year's broods as well as killing out spores of disease fungi which might spread and infect nearby plants. Rake and burn all old refuse from last year, and any winter mulch which may have provided an ideal breeding place. To be on the safe side, even cut and burn all dead and sickly branches of shrubs, and ruthlessly pull up diseased plants in the border.

● AS THE SEASON advances no weeds should be allowed to grow either in the garden or in near proximity, for plant bugs breed in weeds, which you are likely to neglect while pampering garden aristocrats. It is also well to cut away and burn wilted flowers before they go to seed, because the larvae of many a garden pest conceals himself and grows to maturity inside seed pods.

Worms have a way of wrapping themselves up in a leaf, and are easily detected. These should be promptly pulled off and burned. Many aphids and red spiders cling under the leaves, but can often be washed off with a strong spray of the hose turned up under the leaves. The force of the water will knock the bugs to the muddy ground and they will be unable to crawl back to the plant.

Where insecticides must be resorted to, remember that there are two sorts of bugs, those that eat or chew and those that suck. The chewing kinds, such as beetles and caterpillars, have regular little jaws that work like scissors. A poison spray is used for them. Arsenate of lead is an old stand-by, and when used in the proportions of eight or 10 level teaspoonfuls to a gallon of water will season their diet with deadly effect.

● THE LEAF-MINER, though a chewing bug, is less affected by the poisons on the surface, as it eats that part of the leaf just underneath. Nicotine or pyrethrum sprays will sometimes penetrate the thin top layer of leaf and make these pests uncomfortable enough to disappear.

Garden slugs and cut-worms are seldom seen, as they do their work at night and leave only the damage they have done to tell the tale. The poison sprays are not enough for them, but a mash of poisoned bran around the roots of the plant will discourage them. A quart of bran, a level tablespoon of Paris green and two tablespoons of syrup in a pint of water, sprinkled over the surface of the soil, will spell their ruin.

The sucking insects, such as aphids and leaf-hoppers, are provided by nature with beak-like mouths, from which a tiny stylet protrudes to penetrate the plant tissue, from which the sap is sucked. Poison on the surface of the plant will not affect such insects, so a contact spray must be used to coat over their bodies and smother them. The aphids or plant lice are the most common pests in our gardens.

● OF THESE, there are so many different sorts and they multiply at such a rate that it is necessary to spray at intervals of several days to keep up with the generations that pile up. Nicotine is the best spray and should be used in a soapy solution. Forty per cent nicotine sulphate is the liquid form, one-half teaspoon to the gallon of water being the usual proportions.

Hundreds of bugs are coming to life in the soil just as the plants are beginning to appear, which is the time to begin war. Aphids are very fond of the young tips of plants and all through the summer will attack the new growth, but are easily controlled by spraying in time. The lady-bug is the gardener's friend and the natural enemy of plant lice; when she is there, no spray is necessary.

THE BORERS, living within the plants, are the hardest to dislodge. When discovered in time a few drops of nicotine will be effective if injected pure into the hole in the steam, which is then sealed up with mud. When they are older and well fortified in steam or root, the only way is to dig for them or cut away the parts they occupy.

For iris borer, which is only too common with us, spray even before growth starts with arsenate of lead, soap and nicotine as a preventive measure.

The chemical dusts are as effective as the wet sprays, and for a small garden are easier to use. "Massey dust," originated by Cornell University, can be mixed at home. It is merely nine parts of very finely powdered sulphur to one part arsenate of lead. This can be used in a light hand duster and will kill many of the chewing bugs. Add tobacco dust to this mixture for the aphids. To keep the roses clean, use this dust every week from April to October.

BRIGHTENING HOME With PAINT

Spring Season Is Time of Year to Do Something About Those Battered Surfaces

By Mary Murdock

ONE of the thrills of the season is setting forth to buy a can of paint, with determination to do something about those battered surfaces around the house.

Spring sunshine has a way of streaming in and highlighting the very spots which are most unsightly. This irritating behavior on the part of the sun sets us to collecting color cards, and almost before we know it we are embarking on one of the most delightful sprees known to mankind, home painting.

This business of painting is creative, whether we operate on canvas or a kitchen chair and the better the results the more delighted we become with our talents.. If you are not a true virtuoso with the paint can, you may, at the risk of becoming unpopular, boss the other fellow's job.

If you feel the urge to paint coming on, it pays to do a little planning beforehand. Check over all the jobs you intend to do, then collect the materials necessary to do them.

Inadequate preparation of surfaces and haste to begin actual painting, are the two factors which keep amateur painting from being almost as good as that of professionals. There is much justifiable pride in contemplating the finished job, if it has been well down, and, after all, results are what you are after.

First, collect the pieces of furniture you are going to refinish or paint, and place them, if possible, in a room which can be kept free from dust when the painting begins. Then start preparation of the surfaces to be painted. This used to be a dreary business, but the task has been considerably lightened with the advent of the radio for, while the scraping and sandpapering are going on, we can be delightfully entertained according to our taste.

NATURAL or bleached wood surfaces are extremely popular this spring. If you have old pieces from which you wish to remove the finish, follow this procedure: Make a strong solution of ammonia, soap and water. Paint this onto the surface to be removed, wait a few moments and scrape it off. Do not apply enough to wet the wood at any time. This will soften most old finishes.

Next comes the sandpapering first coarse, then fine. Place the sandpaper over a little block if pressure is necessary. For between coats sanding, the weight of the hand supplies pressure enough Linseed oil with plenty of rubbing, waxing and rubbing again, will produce that exquisite natural finish which shows the grain to advantage. This is the best treatment for old pieces which have had generations of doing over.

Enamel and paint finishes do not require such drastic treatment, but some preparation is necessary. New paint will not adhere to any surface which has the least suggestion of grease. Even through the surface seems clean, rub it well with gasoline and sand it lightly. There must not be the slightest moisture back of paint or it will scale. Wait until each coat is dry before applying the next, and follow directions on the can in exact detail. Every manufacturer knows the exact performance of his product and the directions which he supplies are the result of thousands of dollars spent in technical research.

Plastic wood is better than putty for filling cracks and nail holes, as it shrinks little. Choose the right size of brush for your job and always work in a warm room. Remove knobs or pulls and if they are outmoded, replace them with new ones. Use only the best paint, for the improved results will more than justify the slight additional expense.

Painted furniture is good taste in any room in the house. To create the more subtle effects, we use the French style of flat antique glazing applied over the final paint coat. Antique glazing is quite simple and the amateur can do a good job. This is how it is done: You may buy a "vehicle" called glazing liquid, or make it yourself out of one-third boiled linseed oil and two-thirds turpentine. Coat a small section of the surface with this preparation, then mix a small quantity of Vandyke brown (tube paint or Japanese colors ground in oil are equally good), add some burnt umber and a little each of turpentine and boiled linseed oil.

Immediately apply a small quantity of the glazing color with a brush and with a small wad of cotton in a piece of silk, or a soft cloth, blend the glazing color over the surface. For large flat surfaces you may use a brush, the softer the better. Allow the glaze to blend uniformly over the flat surfaces, showing more strongly in the indentations and small areas, with the high spots almost wiped out. Suitable decalcomania designs may be applied as decoration before the glazing is begun. Stripes are made by applying masking tape in rows and painting the surface in between. This convenient help comes in rolls like adhesive tape and can be used more than once.

Flat paint may also be used for painting furniture. Excellent results are obtained by applying two or three coats of good flat paint and finishing with a high grade varnish cut down with flatting oil. This produces a velvety texture in contrast to the glossy surface of enamel. It makes an excellent finish for wood trim and furniture which is not to be antiqued.

Enamel must be supplied over a sandpapered surface if it is to adhere well. The room must be warm and the paint laid on, not stroked, to achieve that fine porcelain finish. Always keep the paint well stirred and when too thick, thin with turpentine. Wipe off splashes just as soon as they occur. Clean your brushes thoroughly each time they are used, so they will be soft when you start work again.

LACQUER is rather difficult for the amateur to handle. Perfect preparation of surfaces is half the success, technique the other half. If you are one of those who became a lacquer victim a few years back, you might like to try your luck again, following these directions. Use a two and a half or three inch brush. If painting a stool or table, turn it upside down and do the small surfaces first. This is a good rule to follow in any case. Flow on the lacquer, working with a full brush and covering the surface completely as you go. You must not try to correct slighted spots by brushing over. It is better to wait and apply a second coat. Thin only with lacquer thinner, which will act also as a remover when lacquer has dried.

Dining-room table tops may have the old surface removed and a highly satisfactory finish applied in this way. After scraping and sanding to satiny smoothness, dust well and apply repeated coats of waterproof spar varnish. Between each coat rub lightly with 00 sandpaper. You may build up the surface to any depth you desire and finally rub down with pumice, or rotten stone and oil. Hot dishes will not affect waterproof varnish.

The amateur may safely undertake bedroom furniture or woodwork, all kinds of chairs and tables, cupboards, radiators, porch furniture and even soft wood floors. Work slowly, carefully and patiently. Be prepared to experiment with your color before doing the entire job. This is important.

Color on the card or in the can appears quite different from the same color applied to a surface. The best plan is to find a length of paper or material which is exactly the right color. Take it with you when you go to buy your paint. Match it exactly or as nearly as you can. If the ready-mixed color is too strong, buy white to thin the tone. Brown softens color as it reduces its value and makes a more beautiful tone than the same color mixed with black.

Keep your paint colors soft, even when strong. Bright colors look amateurish and seldom fit into an established scheme. Get acquainted with glazes for they put your work into the skilled craftsman class and make painted furniture formal enough to combine with the finest mahogany.

Suggestions for Needlework

ANY woman who is clever with her fingers and has escaped thus far the Tyrol craze in fashions will find it difficult to pass by the tempting suggestions for handicraft work in the art needlework departments.

Brilliant accessories are created by application of bright-colored felts to felt foundations, by the embroidering of gay motifs on felt, and by many clever knitted and crocheted patterns. Included in the felt accessories are vestees, wide, shaped belts; pocketbooks, caps and bandings for skirts and blouses. All are designed with matching patterns so that complete ensembles may be created. Hearts and floral motifs associated with the Tyrol mountains are features in the decorations, while yarn and felt lacings also are prominent.

Knitted and chocheted designs which feature the vogue of Tyrol embroidery and embellishment include the same accessories as are available in felt, but with different methods of presentation. Bolero jackets, usually sleeveless, are interesting additions to the collections and many of them are embroidered allover in scattered flower designs. The short, fitted jacket or sweater which has a decorated border also is in keeping with the mode especially when topped by a Tyrolean cap or hat.

Since the cardigan type of sweater has assumed a renewed popularity for spring the use of bright embroidery is an effective trimming for front and pockets. Most of the new cardigans are cut quite short and many of them have short sleeves which may be pushed up above the elbows or worn directly below.

Oiled Curtains

Some person with a faculty for combining practicality and artistry has decided that those brightly tinted oiled curtains such as are sold for bathroom showers and windows would be ideal for the kitchen, too. Now some of the new homes that are looked upon as "models" of efficiency have their kitchens curtained with these sleek fabrics. If lengths are not right, one shower curtain is cut and rebound to fit the window. Any number of interesting and gay color schemes are available.

Small Reading Lamp.

A little lamp which can be attached anywhere and look attractive as well as shed its welcome light is made of maple and has a colorful chintz shade. A screw arrangement at one side of the base is responsible for its movable and versatile qualities. Such a lamp is especially convenient for reading in bed.

Pastel Shade Frocks

ICE cream shades may seem a trifle cold for April wear in St. Louis but they'll be tempting for June and July. Creators of sports clothes are stressing these pastel shades in lightweight woolen frocks and ensembles as well as in silk and cotton dresses. Peach, mint, strawberry and all of the other flavors which look so cool and tantalizing are to be worn next summer, so the fashion authorities say.

Effective Planting

In arranging your summer garden use a mass of California poppies behind a group of the small Nepeta Mussini. The gray green leaves and lavender flowers of the latter will combine with the yellow poppy to make a charming effect. This combination will bloom all summer.

On Including Citrus Fruits In the Menu

Their Distinctive Flavors Lend Interest to the Most Prosaic of Dishes.

NOW that the citrus fruits are so plentiful on the market, and grapefruit in particular at an all-time low, it is time to include citrus fruits in the daily bill of fare. Their bright yellow or orange color adds a festive note to the early spring menu and their distinctive flavors lend interest to the most prosaic of dishes. Citrus fruits can be purchased in all sizes and quantities.

Include these recipes in your meal planning and then listen to the chorus of approval from your family.

For the first course, grapefruit is excellent when used with spearmint to give it zest.

GRAPEFRUIT MINT COCKTAIL

One cup sugar.
Two cups water.
One-third cup lemon juice.
Two drops oil of spearmint.
Green vegetable coloring.
Three grapefruits.

Make a syrup of the sugar and water by boiling one minute. Cool, add lemon juice which has been strained, and the spearmint and coloring. Pour into freezing tray of automatic refrigerator. When frozen to a mush, remove the mixture to a chilled bowl and beat briskly. Return to tray and finish freezing. Cut grapefruit in half, remove membrane. Fill center with mint ice, place on a doily or grape leaf and serve immediately. Approximate yield: Six portions.

Here's a main course dish just a bit out of the ordinary.

HAMBURG WITH ORANGE

One pound ground beef.
One teaspoon salt.
One-fourth teaspoon pepper.
One-fourth cup flour.
One tablespoon butter.
Few pieces bayleaf.
Two oranges, peeled and quartered.
One-fourth cup water.
Six parsley sprigs.

Season the hamburg with salt and pepper and shape it into a piece about an inch thick. Dip this in flour and place in a greased casserole; dot with bits of butter and a few pieces of bayleaf. Place oranges around the steak and add the water. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for 30 minutes. Serve on a hot plate and—to tempt both sight and appetite—alternate oranges with sprigs of parsley. Approximate yield: Six portions.

If you prefer your citrus fruits in other than your meat dish, try adding both the juice and the pulp of two oranges to a sweet potato casserole—original and pleasing combination.

ORANGE SWEET POTATOES

Five sweet potatoes.
Juice and pulp of two oranges.
One-fourth cup fine bread crumbs, buttered.
One tablespoon sugar.

Cook sweet potatoes in boiling salted water until tender. Peel and slice. Cover bottom of greased casserole with a layer of potatoes and repeat until dish is full. Pour juice and pulp of the oranges over the potatoes. Sprinkle top with crumbs mixed with sugar and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) until thoroughly heated and potatoes have absorbed juice. Approximate yield: Six portions.

For the salad course there are many ways of using grapefruit. One variety uses a vegetable in combination with the fruit. The dressing designed for the following salad is as unusual and extravagant as it is simple to make. It adds the luxury touch to the simple grapefruit and celery combination.

GRAPEFRUIT SALAD WITH CELERY

Two grapefruits.
One head lettuce.
Two bunches celery.

Arrange sections of grapefruit on individual salad plates to make a half sphere around it. Place half leaves of lettuce to form a border over the grapefruit, make a wreath of the celery which has been curled by standing in ice water. Pour over the salad the glace fruit dressing.

GLACE FRUIT DRESSING

One-half teaspoon salt.
One-eighth teaspoon paprika.
Two tablespoons lemon juice.
Four tablespoons olive oil.
One tablespoon diced glace cherries.
One tablespoon diced glace plums.
One tablespoon diced glace apricots.

Make a French dressing of the first four ingredients and then add the glace fruits. Pour over the salad. Approximate yield, six portions.

There are almost as many types of citrus fruits desserts as there are days in the year, but these three recipes offer something a bit new and they require very little time for preparation.

Brown sugar custard is an interesting variation from the usual type. A little corn starch should be added to the regular custard mixture if the brown sugar is used instead of the regulation white sugar.

NEW SALAD BAR

GIVE THE OLD TEA TABLE A NEW DEAL IN SOPHISTICATION.

By Eloise Davison

AND now a salad bar—and why not? There's every good reason for having it—salads being the temperamental things they are—that is, salads that really qualify as salads in the eyes of the connoisseur. For, a good salad in most cases is one of those last minute jobs that complicate life, particularly for the housewife who does her own cooking. Practically all perfect salads, at least all crisp ones, are combined just before they are served.

If you are one of those unimaginative ones who puts a dot of mayonnaise on anything that happens to be around and calls it a salad, a salad bar will not interest you. But, if you belong to that growing group of salad devotees who know not only what a good salad is, but that a salad may be the imaginative thing that lifts your meals from the commonplace—you may want to make the acquaintance of the salad bar.

Its place in the home might be in the dining room or even in the living room of your apartment or country house. It is a good medium to keep some of the "little helpers" from underfoot in the kitchen during the last crucial moments while the meal is assembled. It is ideal for an apartment telescoped to fit a scant cabinet or two, a range, a refrigerator, and sink. It adds not only extra working space, but extra storage. In addition it's a fact that, if it is used thoughtfully, it can keep the hostess and guests together. A salad bar makes it easy to assemble a salad right at the table—whether you eat in the dining room, the living room, on the porch, or in the garden.

Even one of your choice antiques might be converted into a salad bar. One salad bar I saw is an authentic antique Welsh maple cupboard. This cupboard became a salad bar when a salad enthusiast decided that he'd have his salads strictly as salads should be, even if he had to mix them himself!

Salad making, in his particular case, is a ritual. And the home in which this salad bar belongs is a happier place since the salad bar was created. There's no hunting for all those elusive things, the exactly right condiments—spice, vinegar, oil—or whatever is needed. Everything used is in the lower part of the cabinet—there's cider vinegar, oil—or whatever is needed.

WHEN not in use, with closed doors and drawer, this Welsh dresser is a pleasing addition to the room—the salad plates, displaying their smart designs, the salad bowl and antique decanters which hold the white wine or sherry (that necessary touch for some dressings) are important factors in the decorative scheme.

It is easy to mix a dressing here or to toss a salad a "hundred tosses 'til every leaf is coated and no excess drop of dressing is left over." A good idea for anyone not afraid to give away his salad secrets and willing to let the guests see just how fastidious a seasoned salad tosser can be!

A nomadic salad bar is a useful thing, too. It leaves the kitchen stock with everything one could possibly want. Roll it out onto the porch or even into the garden, and pleasantly startle your family and guests with your "way with salads." Give a thought to that none too active tea cart so popular a few years ago. Converting it into a salad bar may add to its reputation a fresh and sophisticated activity dated 1937.

If you plan a portable salad bar, remember that there are a number of holders for bottles, even high ones that will make them secure in transit between kitchen, porch or garden. Then, there is the double tray type of holder ordinarily used for carrying glasses. This type may also be used to hold bottles of oil, vinegar and other salad ingredients which might spill easily, when the movable salad bar is in on its way.

Train the various members of the family to create salads and salad dressings, or have a few good recipes ready which you can turn over to some guest who enjoys helping you.

Duchess Potato Balls

Eight medium sized potatoes.
Three eggs, separated.
One-fourth cup melted buter.
One teaspoon salt.
One-fourth teaspoon pepper.
Two tablespoons olive oil.
Three-fourths cup fine dry bread crumbs.
Deep fat.

Peel potatoes. Cook in rapidly boiling salted water until tender. Drain. Force through ricer. Beat together one egg and two egg yolks. Add butter, salt and pepper. Add to potatoes. Beat well. Cool. Form into balls the size of very small oranges. Beat two remaining egg whites slightly, add olive oil. Dip balls into this mixture. Roll in crumbs, fry in deep hot fat (400 degrees) one minute, or until golden brown. Drain. Remove a small piece from the top and scoop out a bit of the center. Fill with a small piece of aubergine tomatoes. Keep hot in the oven until ready to serve. Nice as a fish garnish. Approximate yield, 24 potato balls.

LET ME SUGGEST

by Josephine Walter

CHICAGO, April 3.

WELL here I am in Chicago, just to give you a peek into the future so you'll know what to keep your eyes open for this spring when you start in decorating or refurnishing for the summer season. A trip through the furniture marts and the fabric houses, replete as they are with all the newest things that the manufacturers have to offer, is always a treat and an inspiration.

It sounds like a bromide to say that the fabrics are lovelier than they have ever been before, but I really believe this to be true. I have an especial fondness for chintzes, and many of the houses seem to have concentrated on this material. Flowers have never been gayer or more profuse, undoubtedly because they fit so well into the spring and summer season of decorating, and every type of flower, from a tiny rosebud to a tremendous hydrangea is represented. Not only do the colors in the chintzes follow the gay tones of the spring flowers, but many are in vivid tones that old mother nature never even thought of.

● THE NEWEST THING in the way of these chintzes is having the pattern printed on to look like a finished drapery. By this I mean that one of the colors in the pattern of the chintz is also used as an edging on each side of the material so that when the curtain is made up it looks as though a matching chintz band had been applied at each edge. As bandings and edgings of various types are so popular at the moment this should prove most helpful, as it will save the time and effort of looking for a matching piece of material, and also the extra labor of applying it. One of the most attractive chintzes of this type that I saw had a ground of white chintz with a big bunch of flowers in turquoise blue with touches of yellow and lavender printed on at spaced intervals, and then a wide band of the turquoise printed down both sides. Incidentally, turquoise is one of the most favored colors of the moment in these chintz patterns.

I can't leave this subject of chintzes without describing one made-up drapery that I thought was one of the most effective that I have ever seen. On a plain white chintz ground, a running flower pattern which had evidently been cut out from another piece of chintz, had been appliqued on with a quilting stitch. Expensive, perhaps, but most unusual and attractive. And while I'm on the subject of quilting, this type of work on chintz is becoming increasingly popular. In fact, there has been such a demand for quilted fabrics that most of the houses will quilt practically any of their regular patterns at a slightly additional cost.

—o-o—

● AS TO FURNITURE, the eighteenth century English styles still lead all the rest in popularity. But, here's a little inside tip: watch the French's styles. Many think they are due for a revival. Not the elaborate, gilded pieces that most people have come to think of as French, due to the furnishings in theater lobbies, but the restrained, graceful styles associated with French Country houses and the provinces.

—o-o—

As in other types of furniture, many pieces in the French style are now being shown in bleached finishes, especially bleached walnut and beech and a light finish called butter-nut. Even in houses done in the English manner, it is now considered perfectly appropriate to have a bedroom done in the French style and there is no doubt that this period is light and graceful and well suited to this room in a house. Another reason that it is probably proving popular for bedrooms is that upholstered headboards are now so much in demand and most of the French beds are most charming with this type of treatment.

● IT MAY SEEM a little early to talk about garden furniture, but, of course, the manufacturers are displaying their lines now for later delivery to the stores. And never has there been such a wealth of styles and colors from which to choose. Wrought iron still seems the most popular of all the styles, although reed and rattan are also being shown extensively. The wrought iron pieces are truly beautiful in design, ranging as they do from Sheraton and Chippendale, through Regency to Victorian. White painted frames are still most in demand, although a dusty pink and a lime yellow are both most effective and unusual. With the white frames, colored cushions in brilliant yellow, a soft seagreen or a brilliant blue, are shown with two colors often combined for one terrace. And most to be noted in the newest styles is the fact that comfort has been combined with beauty, for most of the new chairs and chaise longues are built along the lines of regular living room furniture with the proper slant to seats, arms and legs.

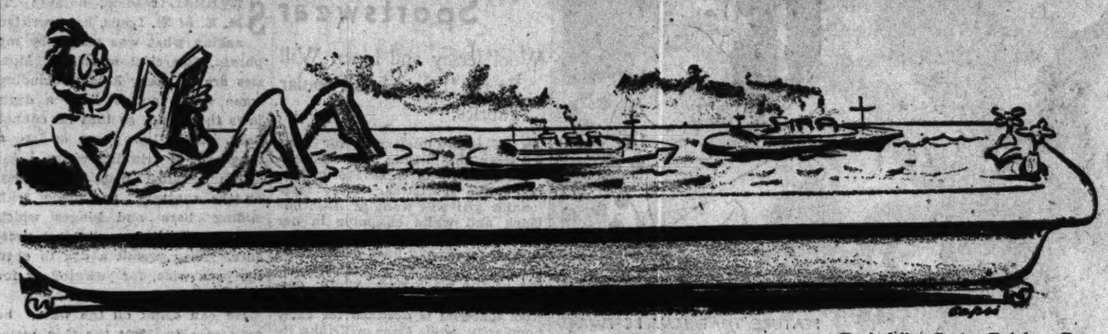
JUST A WORD about accessories. Heads, busts and figurines are being displayed on every type of accessory. Lamp bases are made with classical, French or modern figurines and heads, often painted such surprising colors as turquoise, dusty pink or coral. Natural colored terra cotta is also used over and over again. And the same type of figures are also shown for mantel accessories, dining table decorations and decorative art objects.

Boat RIDE Best PART of TRIP ABROAD

The Verdict of a Man Who Has Made Exactly 43 Crossings to Europe



By GEORGE JEAN NATHAN

THE WONDERFUL FRENCH COOKING! THE NEXT TIME GIVE THEM THE LAUGH.

IT will not be long now before innumerable Americans, myself in all likelihood included, will again excitedly begin tugging at the straps of their traveling bags and breaking their thumb-nails preparatory to trips abroad. At an average outlay of several thousand good American dollars apiece, they will then spend weeks and months galloping around Europe in the happy delusion that they are getting something for their money that they couldn't possibly get at home, and they will eventually return to impart the great delusion to their friends and neighbors, who will fall for it hook, line and sinker. Having made exactly 43 trips abroad since the day I gave up drinking from a rubber nipple and started to use a glass, or more often a seidel, instead, having lived over there for periods ranging from several months to a year or more, and having experienced almost everything that was (or wasn't) worth experiencing, I feel that the time has come to offer these galloping fellow-countrymen of mine a few smart suggestions.

The first of these suggestions is that they can save a lot of money and get exactly the same sensations which they get in Europe right here in America, and with infinitely less discomfort and with no other necessary knowledge of languages than English. In point of fact, they won't even have to know English, which will make it easier for a number of them. Take, for example, the rare aroma of the asphalt in the Champs Elysees, particularly on a soft, rainy evening in springtime Paris. That is one of the pet romantic reminiscences of homecoming Americans. There's no smell so lovely and nostalgic in all the world, they tell you. Well, isn't there? They can get identically the same smell—and I say it in all seriousness—in any Philadelphia sidestreet on any mild, rainy springtime evening. But the chestnut blossoms in the Bois de Boulogne. Match those!—they demand. And if you assure them that they will find exactly the same chestnut blossoms in the outskirts of Cleveland, O., and that the Cleveland chestnut blossoms are even lovelier and smell more fragrant, they will not believe you.

The foods in Paris! The wonderful French cooking! You have heard the returned travelers' ecstasies on those subjects. Well, the next time you hear them give them the laugh. In all Paris there are today not more than three or four restaurants at the very most out of the whole lot where the food and cooking compare with what you can readily get in dozens of New York restaurants (many of which are much better), in at least an equal number of eating places in Chicago, and in various restaurants in New Orleans, Los Angeles, Boston, Charleston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, San Francisco and other American cities, including—in one restaurant each—even such out-of-the-way localities as Lynnbrook, Huntington and Glen Cove on Long Island or Virginia Beach outside of Norfolk, Va. (ask for Mossi). The average restaurant in Paris at the present time is no better than the average second or third rater in New York.

THEN there is the opera! In Germany there hasn't been any opera since Hitler began his classic yodeling. The Paris opera is a joke. And Covent Garden in London can't compare even remotely with the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. As for the theaters, all the good English plays, if any, and all the good English actors duly make their early appearances in America; the French theater is dead; the German theater is deader; and the Italian theater hasn't for years now, despite Mussolini's commendable attempt to help it, amounted to anything.

The so-called night life of the European capitals, once gay and brilliant, has became pale and shabby. Compared with the New York night life, it is like a copper penny trying to outdazzle the moon. London's night life shuts down at the hour when New York's is just beginning and even when it is in operation it discloses as its leading items of entertainment stale American singers, dancers and clowns, second-rate American jazz bands and the kind of gala paper hats that passed out of the American picture with "Dardanella," the Castles, the turkey trot and poke evening dress collars. In Paris, the night life centers largely around old-time Harlem entertainers, dimly lit Russian dancing dumps, can-can parlors with the same ancient dames who were can-canning back in Taft's day, and Negro American swing bands that have outworn their welcome in London. And Berlin, under Nazi morality, has a night life confined principally to Schweitzer cheese sandwiches, Munich beer, players of moony waltzes on the piano or violin, and migratory palmists who, whatever the fate revealed by the lines on your own palm, invariably predict a great future for Der Fuehrer, heil.

In Vienna, if you go to bed around 11 o'clock you may possibly have merry dreams, which will be a lot more fun than you can find if you stay up. The night life of Rome closely resembles that of Savannah, Ga., and so far as the night life of Brussels goes, it would require a regiment of G-men to discover it. If, suddenly, in any one of these capitals a night-time native were to behold something like the Rockefeller Center Rainbow Room he wouldn't be able to believe his eyes. And if, on top of it, he were to encounter a Stork Club, a Morocco, a Twenty-One, a Persian Room, a Paradise, a Cotton Club, a Ubangi, or any one of three dozen or more such New York establishments, he would unquestionably imagine that someone had slipped absinthe, mixed with a little nitroglycerine, into his Cointreau.

BUT the girls, the beautiful girls, that you see by the carload in Hyde Park, on the Thames, in the Bois, in the Prater, in the Kaerntner-ring, in Unter den Linden, in the Tiergarten! Bunk, gentlemen, bunkissimo. I know, because I looked. And when I look, I LOOK. I will freely grant that now and again you will see a sweetmeat in Berlin to wobble your complacency—some of those German girls, it can't be denied, are lulus—and I will allow that once in a great while you may view something fetching to the eye in the Vienna Prater or even in the Paris Bois. But if you equip yourself with binoculars, nay, with a large and powerful telescope, you will not in three months' assiduous round of all the places named see one-hundredth the number of true, dyed-in-the-wool, genuine, A No. 1 daisies that you can see in 15 minutes' time any day around the lunch hour on the streets of any large American city, New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Los Angeles and San Francisco in particular. Or, for that matter, on the streets of such smaller towns as Dallas, Tex.; Greensboro, N. C., or Fall River, Mass. Do not, please, mistake this for chauvinism. It is as true as the nose on your face.

We come to the remarkable European hotels. That there are some first-rate hotels abroad no one can gainsay. But the very best are no whit better than the best American hotels, and the average European hotel is no faintest marker for the average American hotel. As for the general lower run of foreign hostelries, they wouldn't be tolerated in even an American coal mining town.

The best thing, in short, about a trip to Europe, is the ocean voyage. That, with the enormous improvement in trans-Atlantic ships, is undeniably tasty. But once you land, if you haven't entirely lost your sense of realism, you will find nothing that you can't find—and find a heap better—right here at home. If you think this is mere idiotic patriotic babble, you don't know your America. The only things Europe can give you that America can't are the school book sights, horsemeat instead of beefsteak, some excellent wines at reasonable prices, ice-cold bathrooms, Tyrolean overcoats for a few dollars that you can't match here for 15 times the amount, impossible hair cuts, the peerless Golden Arrow express and no hotel house detectives.

A Father Who Enjoys Games With Children

He Sometimes Tries Patience of Mother Through His Antics.

By Angelo Patri

FATHER is big and jolly, and after a day in the office he feels like having some exercise and some fun into the bargain. After dinner, and before bedtime, he plays games with the children. He plays tiger in the den. He is the tiger and his den is under the table. The children, armed with long spears of tightly rolled newspaper, charge at him. He roars, charges in turn, the children run and yell wildly and return to the charge.

Another good game is fort. The fort is made of the dining-room chairs, some from the living-room, too. The table-cloths are good for flags and the sofa cushions and pillows are ammunition. There is a shout, pillows hurtle through the air. Loud laughter, protests, charges anew and anew until the besieged is worn out and surrenders. It is great fun. Father enjoys it as much as the children. Only mother disapproves.

"They will lie awake now for a couple of hours. They are so excited they cannot sleep. Then I have to let them sleep over their rising time in the morning and their whole day is out of joint. Can't you play some quieter games?"

"They're having a good time. It does them good."

"You're wearing the furniture out. The place looks a sight. You can't expect to throw pillows about the house and then use them as cushions for people to sit on."

"Why not? I sit on them. You sit on them. The others can do the same or do without. I pay for the cushions and the furniture. I can use them as I like. My children are going to play with their father and I'm going to enjoy my children. I hadn't much fun when I was their age. My father never looked at me. Mine are not going to have that to say."

"But, George, can't you play some other games with them? I know they love to play with you and I love to have them. But can't you see it breaks their routine, spoils the furniture—".

"Now, Mary, don't tell me that all over again. Besides I know it and I don't care. I'm going to have some fun with the kids and let them have some with me. I'll buy new furniture when it is needed."

—o-o—

MOTHER TRIES to suppress the tears that have risen and say no more about it. How is she to manage to rear the children in good shape, teach them to care for the things about them, to be good mannered in the house, and all the rest?

Maybe father will compromise. Maybe he can be persuaded to play a game less active, more suitable for the time and the place. If not, then the only thing to do is to wait in patience for this play phase to wear itself out as it certainly will. Then the stage can be set for other games with father. His affection for the children, his interest in them is too precious to be risked for anything short of carnage.

Try teaching the children table games; keep offering them until you strike one they like a lot. They will beg father to play it with them. Gradually the roughhouse will be subdued. And you know, a little of it does a lot of good. Now and then, let the rafters ring, preferably in the attic or the cellar, where there are rafters to ring.

Crushed pineapple that has been carefully drained adds to the deliciousness of many fish salads, especially tuna and salmon. A small amount of lemon juice also will contribute toward a better flavor.

DAILY CARE NECESSARY FOR WOMEN'S FINGERTIPS

By Gladys Glad

OVER in Morocco, oddly enough, the process of shortening the fingernails is considered a rite. It is held to be unlucky to shorten them on any days other than a Thursday or a Friday. As a consequence, most of the Moroccan maidens give their nails only weekly attention.

One doesn't have to go to Morocco, however, to find girls who give their nails only weekly care, for there are many here at home who think that all they require is a weekly manicure. They are wrong.

Of course, it is not expected that you give your nails a complete manicure every day. But there are certain items of care that you should make a daily practice. The half-moons on the nails, for instance, require special care always if their delicate outlines are to be preserved.

When the half-moons on the fingernails are clearly defined and properly shaped, they add greatly to the beauty of the fingertips. Yet it sometimes proves quite a difficult task to keep the half-moons perfectly exposed. For the cuticle, if neglected, tends very quickly to adhere to the nails and to conceal them.

The whole trick in preserving attractive half-moons lies in giving them proper care. A bit of cotton should be wrapped about the end of an orangewood stick, to massage the cuticle, and then dipped in cuticle oil or warmed olive oil. Then each nail should be gone over with the oiled tip, working from the nail tip up to the cuticle. Next, the orangewood stick should be passed over the base of each nail and the cuticle gently pushed back. This should be repeated over each fingertip every single day, in order to keep the cuticle supple and in good condition.

If you really haven't time for this daily procedure, you can benefit your fingertips and improve your half-moons somewhat merely by the manner in which you wash your hands. When you lather your hands, using only a pure, bland soap, of course, give your fingertips a bit of massage, rubbing the creamy lather around each cuticle and gently pushing back the cuticle with your fingertips.

After rinsing your hands, take your towel and go over the cuticle again while drying your paddies. First dry the hands, then rub the towel from the tip of each nail up to its cuticle, and finally follow the line of the cuticle with a firm massage movement. After cleansing the hands in this manner, a good hand lotion or skin balm should always be used, in order to counteract any drying effects of the cleansing and to keep the hands soft and smooth.

And when massaging a lotion of this sort into your hands, always give your cuticle a final massaging. This will eliminate the possibility of hangnails, and will shape the half-moons most attractively.

The Recent Advances In Medical Field

Physician Lists Some of the Outstanding Gains Reported Lately.

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

"MEDICINE MARCHES ON" is the title of a review of advances lately reported in medical science. They are:

A new skin disinfectant, several times as powerful as carbolic acid, which is the standard disinfectant, was discovered at the University of Illinois. It is a compound colored alcoholic solution of mercuric chloride. Used in several hundred emergency and surgical cases, it was found that no infections followed its use and that it was non-irritating.

Intramuscular injections of liver extract have prepared for surgical operation patients whose resistance, as determined by the number of white blood cells, was low. The liver extract apparently stimulated the bone marrow to produce more white blood cells.

Certain skin disorders are benefited by mental hygiene. So says Dr. John H. Stokes of the University of Pennsylvania. To cure such disorders, the patient must observe six principles, namely, temporary repudiation of responsibility, discipline and self-analysis, re-education in personal detachment, detecting and releasing muscular retention, finding ways to discharge muscular retention, and incovation of a sense of the ridiculous.

NEW USES for castor oil presented by Dr. Winfield Scott Pugh of New York. He says that castor oil is of great value in irritable colon and colitis. It is a detoxicant in burns and an evacuant in urinary sepsis.

Cobra venom has been used for the relief of unbearable pain. Its advantage over morphine and other opiates are that it is not habit-forming and does not produce the disagreeable by-effects.

The cause of ulcer of the stomach has been studied by Dr. Alton Ochner. He believes that ulcers result primarily from a pre-disposition to the disease, consisting in a tissue susceptibility in the lesser curvature of the stomach. Too much acidity is almost certain to be one of the general causes of ulcers. Eating, drinking and smoking habits must be carefully controlled to avoid the formation of ulcers. Excessive use of tobacco on an empty stomach is especially dangerous.

Sea foods containing iodine and the milk of cows pastured in regions where the soil contains iodine are efficient goiter preventatives, according to Dr. Row E. Remington of the University of South Carolina. From his study, the doctor has concluded that the iodine of marine fish, shell fish and milk from goiter-free regions is equal, but not superior, to the use of iodized salt, as judged by its ability to maintain normal thyroid glands.

Sandwiches have become so important in today's menus that one expert on sandwich-making devotes an entire volume to her favorite recipes. One thousand and one types are included and they range from entire meals to dainty tidbits for afternoon teas.

Alarm Clocks for the Kitchen Stove

IF your kitchen stove is not equipped with one of those smart-looking alarm clocks, one may be purchased separately and installed at small cost. One clock which is shown in the shops may be obtained with a matching condiment set. When putting the biscuits in the oven you set it for the time required for baking and go on about your work or bridge-playing. The alarm rings on the dot.

Peasant-Style Frock Retains Its Popularity

THE peasant style of frock which has a tight bodice, skirt gathered full at the waistline and banded trimming continues its popularity for spring and is shown in various types ranging from sportwear to dancing themes.

One of the most colorful versions of the dirnhl is featured in the sports shops. It is made of a challis-like woolen that is very sheer and has an allover flower motif combining tones of red, green and blue. Red velveteen ribbon bands the skirt and the short full sleeves while wide bows of the ribbon extend from neckline to waistline on the front of the blouse.

An evening frock created in this same manner is of drapery moire, the scattered floral pattern being the type that looks gay and cheerful as a chair covering. The background is a creamy white while the bouquets present a multi-colored effect. The skirt is full and the bodice has a sleeveless bolero bound with velvet ribbon.

MY FRIEND EDWARD -::- By Jed Kiley

well and knew that he could take a joke.

"Oh, no, you don't," I said sternly. "I know that old gag. I lost the best coat in the place that way last night."

Everybody within hearing distance laughed, but the Prince looked serious.

"All right," he said, "I'll let you pick out my coat and I'll bet you champagne for the crowd that it is the worst in the cloak room."

That sounded like an easy bet to me. Edward, as everybody knows, is one of the best-dressed men in the world. And besides, there must have been about 100 coats to pick from. I couldn't see how I could lose. All I had to do was to pick the oldest-looking coat and the bet was won.

It was so simple that I decided to leave the picking to the cloakroom girl.

"Be sure you get the shabbiest," I told her in French and then ordered several of the best bottles of champagne in the place. While the girl looked diligently through the wraps, we drank champagne. Later, when the girl came toward us holding what was certainly the shabbiest coat I had ever seen in the place I knew I had won.

The garment was an old soiled raincoat of the trench variety. The collar I could see was soiled beyond all cleaning and there was a three-cornered tear in one of the lapels. The hat with it looked all right, but the cane that accompanied the worn coat certainly did belong to the same person. It was simply a stick of wood with a large knot for the handle. The bark had not even been removed and it was chipped as though someone had been running it across a picket fence. I took one look at the sad outfit and beckoned to the waiter.

"Give the check to Lord Chester," I said, "and make it good."

—o-o—

THE Prince reached in his pocket. I thought it was to pay the check, but instead he drew out a bill and handed it to the girl.

"Merci, Mademoiselle," he said, "I value that coat and stick more than any I own."

And he proceeded to put on the worn coat and, swinging the piece of tree jauntily, walked out the door.

The last I saw of him was a glimpse of the stick of wood being waved at me from the car window. He never offered an explanation, but the morning papers did. I read that H. R. H. had attended a dinner the night before tendered him by a group of Canadian veterans of the World War. And, the article went on to say, the Prince had appeared in the identical trench-coat he had worn in the trenches and carried in his hand a stick cut from a shell-torn tree near Ypres, which had been presented to him on the battlefield by a wounded Canadian soldier.

No wonder he valued them.

There were two husky chaps who always "happened" to be around wherever the Prince went.

Only once had I seen these two leave their positions at the bar. It was on the night of Edward's first visit to my night club. Two Russian dancers were about to do the Cossack dagger dance. The lights were out and the spotlight was on the two rather wild-looking Russians. Suddenly both dancers waved their formidable-looking knives in the air and yelled "Long live Russia!" I thought nothing of it until I noticed Edward nervously looking around. Then it came to me that here was a man that, brave as he was, was always in the shadow of assassination. I knew the Russians as white refugees loyal to the Old Empire, but this was no time to take any chances.

So I yelled "lights" at the top of my voice. On went the lights and the Russians finished their dance in a blaze of illumination.

"Thank you, Kiley," was all Edward said, but I never permitted the Russians to dance again while he was present. I chanced to glance behind me then and there were the two gentlemen from the bar standing unobtrusively but very closely behind Edward's chair.

"They are body guards," Edward went on, "just like your gangster fellows have in the states." They were as impersonal as statues.

"They're a priceless pair of fox hounds," was the Prince's comment.

Later in the evening I tried to engage the "foxhounds" in conversation, but as far as I ever learned they were both deaf and dumb.

THE BRITISH INVADER

By Robbin Coons

HOLLYWOOD, April 3.

HAVING seen America's highest-paid actress (Mae West by the statistics) I felt obliged to see the world's highest-paid star—Gracie Fields of England.

She was honor guest at a studio luncheon the other day. That made investigation easy. We had quite a tete-a-tete, Gracie and I, she at one end of a 30-foot table and I practically at the other. That's the deceptive thing about these informal luncheons. You can't tell a thing from where the flowers are spotted.

She was late, and she breezed in as natural as a gust of wind. She flashed a big, honest-to-goodness smile, acknowledged introductions en masse, pushed her hat back with a broad comedy gesture, said something like "This makes me feel like a bally queen!" and sat down.

From then on there was pretty continuous merriment from her end of the table. From ours, by leaning over a trifle, you could catch glimpses of the Fields pantomime on which some, but not all, of her fame rests. And to judge by the laughter, the stories she was telling must have been good. She looks like a hit.

That makes her one of the strangest "selling" problems ever a studio faced. Not one of her many British pictures has been shown in this country, where for Twentieth Century she is to make her first Hollywood film, at $200,000 per. Practically no one in America recognizes her name. Her British producers never have worried over an American release for her pictures, for the simple reason that the films, no matter how poor, clean up a fortune in British theaters.

In England, said Monty Banks, actor-director-producer, who will be in charge of enlarging her fame, the fans idolize her. Merely her name over a theater means a sellout. In America? Well, they hope to co-star her with some "name," perhaps Wallace Beery, for her first picture. After that, he implied, she should be able to "draw" on her own name alone.

—o-o—

● FROM BANKS (who was sitting close by) we learned probably more about Miss Fields than Miss Fields would have told. His enthusiasm made him sound more like her press agent than her producer. He said, for instance, that Gracie had no mind for money, that she gave untold quantities of it to charity, and hated to have it known. (She struck me, personally, as that kind of person.)

Afterward (from Gracie Fields) I ascertained that those stories that her accent was too thick for American film purposes were grossly exaggerated. She speaks with an accent, but it is quite intelligible.

"You know," she said, "half the time I can't understand what I'm quoted as saying in dialect. My parents really get quite annoyed about it. Oh, I don't mind!"

—o-o—

THE MOVIE CHORINE, in times past, was likely to catch cold working in the sprightly spring breezes.

This spring, come breeze, come wind, come snow, her working clothes should constitute no occupational hazard.

—o-o—

For there's a trend, in chorine costuming, towards clothes. Girls who used to dance in postage stamp outfits—or feathers, or scanty beads — now are trailing around the sets in flowing gowns that billow about the ankles. Others are wearing smart jackets and trousers or doublet-and-hose effects that actually include the hose—black silk variety.

—o-o—

● I NOTICED IT FIRST on the set of "Turn Off the Moon." The beauties each wore a flowing outfit of dark filmy blue, decollete but full-length.

I cornered Edith Head, who designed these coveralls, and asked what—why—?

"Oh," she said, "it's the new idea. Near-nudity is passe. These are more graceful. And it's more effective to suggest beauty through concealment."

On other musical sets you find costumes covering a multitude of sins and for pretty nearly the same reasons. No, not the Hays office so much as a growing realization that the variations possible to a state of practical undress are few; but to a state of dress, unlimited.

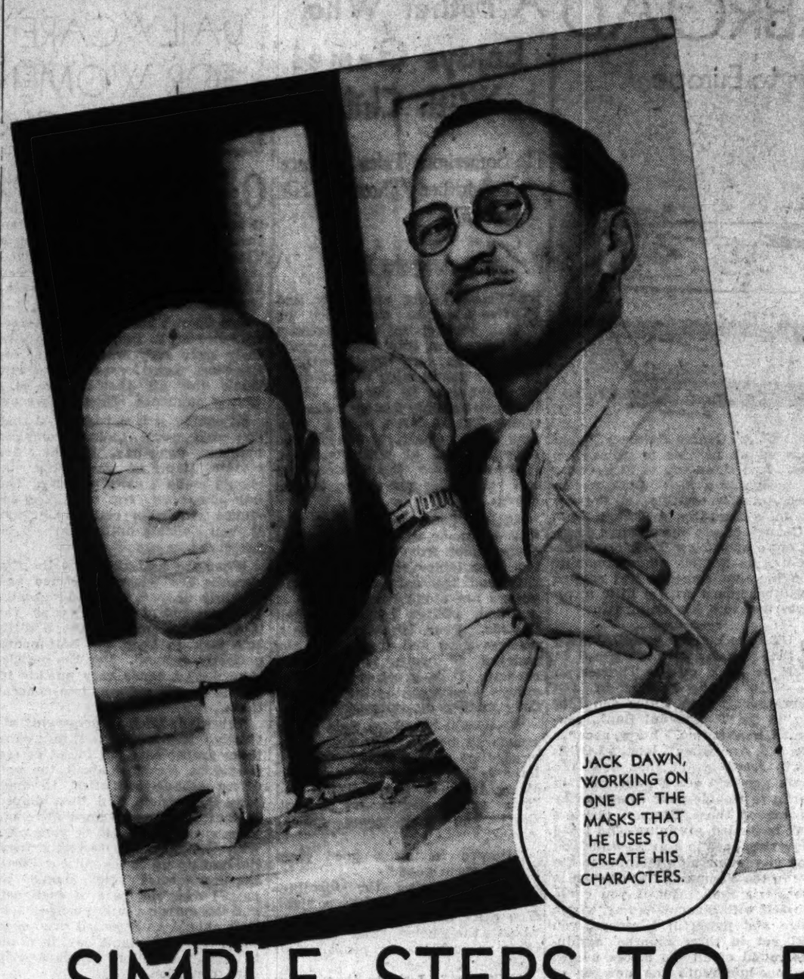
All the Hays office—that is, Joe Breen—insists on is "good taste."

On the "Broadway Melody of 1937" set the girls still are in rehearsal togs, but the graceful drapery, revealing-through-concealing idea will apply largely. Dave Gould, the dance director, suggested that lighting effects could do wonders toward retaining the prime appeal of girl shows without offending "good taste."

"Shall We Dance?" features an ensemble of tappers with Fred Astaire, the girls all wearing formal black evening gowns. "Vogues of 1938" is concerned largely with models, and that implies dress, but the chorines too will be wearing much more than the well-known beads.

"The Gold Diggers" series has progressed a long way from near-nudity.

So the 1937 chorine can sing "We're in the Clothes!"



JACK DAWN, WORKING ON ONE OF THE MASKS THAT HE USES TO CREATE HIS CHARACTERS.

SIMPLE STEPS TO BEAUTY

By JACK DAWN

NOTED HOLLYWOOD MAKE-UP EXPERT

THERE is no excuse for an unattractive woman. The only cost of beauty is a bit of spare time for self-study, and the will to correct faults where faults exist.

In the first place, the woman born without a single redeeming feature is a distinct rarity. To offset less-pleasing features she may have beautiful hair, beautiful eyes, a piquant tip of the head, a beautifully shaped mouth.

At any rate it is a pretty safe step to surmise that every woman has some one feature that may be played to advantage. Knowing this it is up to women to find it.

This, of course, sounds easy. It isn't. That is the reason why so many women fail. They take one look at themselves, shrug their shoulders, and resign themselves to being just as they are. Instead of this they should arm themselves with combs, hairpins, eyebrow tweezers and a good dose of self-confidence and then get to work.

Perhaps a few preliminary steps at this point would not be out of order. Here they are:

First of all, determine the general shape of your face. By this I mean classify it into one of the following groups: Round, long or oval.

If it happens to be oval, consider yourself extremely fortunate, for yours is a comparatively simple problem.

If it is round or long, attention to a few tips will correct it in short order.

Let us first consider the case of the girl with a long face and nose. First of all, this type should never part her hair in the center. A center part gives an unbroken line from way beyond the top of the forehead and down to the point of the chin.

In cutting down this length we first part the hair on the side, and as low on the side as possible. Just this one move will work wonders.

The problem of hair settled, we next take a look at the eyebrows. Just as we thought, she has plucked them from the top, allowing an extra expanse of forehead to present itself, adding to the general length.

This girl should allow her eyebrows to grow in again, then start at the beginning and arch them from the lower portions. She should also be careful to keep as little space between them over the bridge of her nose as she can. By breaking the forehead line in this manner the length of the face is greatly diminished.

And why is it that girls with long faces insist upon placing their rouge in two dots, high on the cheekbones? Wrong again. To offset face length, the rouge should be applied below the cheek bones, evenly blended to give a full and rounding effect. This done, and the rest of the makeup completed, we have a young woman with an entirely different face.

With this girl smiling happily at the results, we turn our attention to another young lady who looks into the mirror with eyes set in a face like a full moon.

Hastily reaching for a hairbrush, we remove her side part and place it directly in the center. The continuous line from the forehead automatically lengthens her face.

. . . THEY SHOULD ARM THEMSELVES WITH COMBS, HAIRPINS, EYEBROW TWEEZERS, AND A GOOD DOSE OF SELF-CONFIDENCE, AND THEN GET TO WORK.

Once again we turn to eyebrows, this time plucking them from the top to give additional forehead height. Her brows are plucked further apart over the forehead, to give more length to the tip-tilted nose that usually accompanies this type.

Although cheekbones are rarely visible, rouge is placed high, creating, as it were, synthetic highlights.

Thus the round-faced girl puts in her bid for glamor.

Oval faces, of course, are ideal. Little need be done to them. It is safer, however, to avoid a center part. For this type it is best to either brush the hair straight back from the face, or adopt a high part on either side. Careful trimming of the eyebrows, a bit from the top and bottom is best. The eyebrows should start approximately one-quarter of an inch beyond the inner corners of the eyes.

When women once discover the general shape of the face, and act accordingly, the battle is half won. From that point on rather general rules are in order.

First of all, a warning about makeup. Always remember that it was invented to enhance beauty, not to create it. A line here or there may improve a face, but it is impossible to paint on beauty. Better to have too little makeup than too much.

For street wear always follow the natural lines of the face. Never attempt to paint on a larger mouth or build up the size of a small one. This is sometimes possible on the screen, but for street wear it's a different matter.

Of course by make-up it is possible to play up a good feature and thus serve to make a bad one less noticeable.

For example, if the eyes are large and lustrous, use a more or less exaggerated shadow and mascara. Play down the nose and mouth, which may not be so good, with very light lip rouge and powder to exactly match the skin. The very lightest of rouge is also desirable in such a situation.

This same principle may be applied to other features of the face. If the mouth is the best, use bright lipstick, and practically no other color on the rest of the face. To bring out a particularly attractive nose, use medium lipstick, rouge and eye make-up.

It is always well to remember that the lines of youth slant upward. In applying lipstick, practice giving the slightest of upward twists to the lines at the corners of the mouth. This must be so slight as to be almost invisible, but it makes a great difference in appearance. Never end a make-up line with a stroke continuing down. This is not only true in the application of lipstick, but in eye shadow and eyebrow pencil as well.

Chances are that this will seem difficult and artificial at first, but several days of practice will serve to develop it into a fine art.

The amount of make-up that should be used during the day varies, of course, with the type I personally advocate the use of a powder base, a light coating of powder and rouge, lipstick and mascara on the upper lashes only.

For evening add eyeshadow, mascara to the lower lashes, and darker rouge and lipstick. For daytime, never make up in artificial light. This one factor alone results in many of the unconscious misuses of make-up evident on the street every day.

It is just as important for evening wear that one apply make-up by electric illumination. If make-up is not heavy enough, artificial light entirely eliminates it.

—o-o—

NO story on improving feminine appearance would be complete without at least touching on the importance of proper coiffures. The importance of a correct part, mentioned earlier, is important from a beauty standpoint. The right coiffure tends to enhance this beauty.

Many things may be accomplished by the arrangement of the hair. The right hairdress can take 10 years away from a woman's age, while a wrong one can add 10 years to it.

The most important thing to remember is naturalness. Never force the hair to do tricks. True beauty is natural, not artificial.

In choosing a coiffure it is good to remember several things. First of all, never try to cover a scar or some other physical defect by pulling the hair over it. The only thing this serves to do is to call attention to the fact that something is being hidden.

Another common mistake is the fallacy in belief that piling the hair on top of the height creates the illusion of height. It doesn't. It simply makes the individual appear strangely top heavy. The most effective manner to either cut down or build up stature is the hair part mentioned earlier.

Of course, I happen to be of the school that believes a coiffure should blend in with a gown. This is particularly true of evening wear. How much more effective a period-type gown becomes when worn with a period-type hairdress. There is something incongruous about a frock of this type topped off by a strictly modern coiffure. Therefore, to be 100 per cent effective, plan the coiffure as carefully as you do the dress you intend to wear. After all, it is in reality as much a part of your costume as the slippers or other accessories.

But in speaking of beauty, there is more to consider than the face, in spite of the fact that modern opinion seems to center the quality directly in that location.

The face is only one part of true beauty. The figure plays an all-important part, as does that frequently forgotten phase known as grooming.

Faultless grooming can easily create the illusion of beauty, whether it is there or not. This, of course, embraces such items as neatness, choice of frock and make-up for an occasion, and attention to small details.

Little things such as chipped nail polish, a spotty, hastily powdered face, teeth bearing lipstick traces, rouge dabbed in hit-or-miss fashion, are all enemies even to faultless beauty. The naturally beautiful woman should watch these phases just as carefully as the woman who must take more time in figuring out the best way to bring out her good points.

—o-o—

IN MY WORK at the movie studios, I have been privileged in being make-up adviser to some of the most beautiful women in the world. Norma Shearer, Joan Crawford, Jean Harlow, Jeanette MacDonald, Virginia Bruce are only a few of them. In the years I have been engaged in this work I have yet to see one of them who failed to pay attention to little, seemingly unimportant items about her person.

Another fact that few persons outside of Hollywood realize, is that all of these girls wear a minimum of makeup when not actually busy before the cameras. There is a mistaken idea rampant that screen actresses use the same makeup for street as for working hours.

Joan Crawford, for example, wears only lipstick, daytime and evening.

Jeanette MacDonald uses a light dusting of powder, a light coating of rouge and lipstick. Jean Harlow follows this same formula. Extremely heavy make-up has no place in their everyday life, and is extremely rare in film circles.

As far as time to tend their beauty needs is concerned, they have little more than the woman in everyday life. They, however, are willing to sacrifice a few hours' sleep in the morning, or endure a little extra exertion at night to get in that exercise, massage, shampoo or manicure so necessary in the business of presenting a charming picture.

Taking it all in all, beauty is pretty much a personal matter, with the rewards going to those women who elect to work the hardest to achieve it.

To be attractive is every woman's right, and with a little study is well within her reach.

EVERY WOMAN HAS SOME ONE FEATURE THAT MAY BE PLAYED TO ADVANTAGE.

Black-White Costumes for Sportswear

Wool Jersey and Linen Will Be the Two Most Popular Fabrics.

GAY colors may rule for town wear this spring and summer, but when it comes to clothes for active sportswear, every fashionable girl will want at least one black and white ensemble in her wardrobe.

Wool jersey and linen are the two fabrics from which the most striking of the black and white costumes are made. The light-weight wool material is destined for early popularity, while linen will take its place on warmer days. Many of the smartest frocks are black with white trimming and are topped by white jackets. Shoe-string lacings, slide fasteners that are decorative, appliqued motifs and rickrack braiding are among the popular modes of trimming—all of them being white on black or black on white.

Slacks of white wool jersey are topped by black halters and frequently by large patterned black and white linen coats. Black linen skirts or one-piece dresses may have boleroes or longer jackets of white or printed fabrics. There's no rule to follow as to the length of the coat or to its degree of swagger or fitting.

Hats and shoes repeat the vogue of black and white, which seems destined to offer competition to the usual white and brown alliance for summer sportswear. Large brimmed cotton hats display appliques of black, while white footwear has black trimming.

Lemon Butter

One-half pound butter
Two tablespoons lemon juice
One tablespoon chopped parsley

Wash butter in cold water until waxy. Cream until soft, adding lemon juice drop by drop. Work in parsley. Form into shapes the size and length of a finger. Place on baking pan. Chill until firm. With a silver knife draw a wheat sheaf design on each. Just before serving fried fish, lift a long morsel of the butter with a spatula and place on fish. Approximate yield: six portions. Carry quickly to the table, where the delightful odor and golden appearance of the butter will delight everyone.

CALLING ALL DOGS

By Albert Payson Terhune

SEVERAL readers, notably T. M. E. of St. Louis, have written asking what was meant by my phrase, "merciful muzzles." Muzzles are of many kinds: including some whose straps keep a dog's jaws tight shut, so that he cannot pant, much less yawn or lap a tongueful of drinking water.

The so-called merciful muzzles, on the contrary, are made with sliding bars and hinges which move at the very slightest pressure. They permit a dog to open his jaws wide, for yawning or for panting.

He can drink all the water he may care to. But the thin metal bars in front of his mouth prevent him from biting. These and other varieties of merciful muzzles may be bought at any large sporting-goods store and at most first-class hardware shops.

In choosing a muzzle, make certain that it fits your dog's nose comfortably. Almost always this can be done by a slight adjustment of straps, etc. At first make him wear it only a few minutes at a time. Accustom him to associate it in his mind with his daily outdoor exercise. Soon he will be used to it. Where the law insists that dogs be muzzled, the muzzle can at least be comfortable to its wearer.

LONG AGO some humorist described the dachshund as "a dog-and-a-half long and half-a-dog high." Which was an unmerited slur on a fine dog. For some reason, during the past three years, the dachshund has increased tremendously in numbers and in public favor, here in America.

Few dogs have forged ahead so fast in popularity. Fanciers have argued as to whether the dachshund was a hunting dog and chum, in ancient Egypt, or whether he merely dates back to early German history.

In either case, he came to his highest development among the Germans. He was put to one of the grimmest and most hazardous jobs in all the many perilous phases of the hunt. When a murderously fierce badger took refuge in its underground burrow and crouched there at bay, the dachshund crawled down through the narrow tunnel in pursuit.

It was like venturing into the lair of a tiger. For the badger is one of the most formidable brutes of its size. The dachshund did not flinch from the terrific danger even though one of the two adversaries could not hope to come out of the lair alive. A gallant little dog!

Many new flowers have passed through the first critical inspection and made good. Some of these should be used each year for the interest they give to the garden and to keep abreast of horticulture.

Menjou Upsets Precedent In Comeback as a Comedian

Snappy Dresser of the Old Days on Way to Stardom After Change of Character—Benefits of "Re-Typing" Predicted for George Raft in Forthcoming "Souls at Sea"

HOLLYWOOD, April 3.

ONE of the most sought-after screen actors in Hollywood today is Adolphe Menjou. He has been in pictures longer than most of the stars and was one of the famous collection of artists who flew the Paramount banner in the days when Paramount controlled about everything in sight in the film game—including the actors. Somehow he began to slip. The fans lost their taste for him, although the studios exhibiting one of their rare touches of intelligence, kept him busy. Now, exceedingly popular with the customers again, he is about to become a star for the first time in his long career.

Menjou can credit his rebirth in the films to a sudden "re-typing." When he came into the cinema, by way of the stage, the only thing the screen knew about comedy was that it had something to do with custard pies, well-placed banana skins and ponds of water. True a young man named Chaplin was introducing a touch of pathos—how he loves that word still—into his slapstick but a funny man to get the required quota of laughs, had to wear funny clothes, funny hats and carry a comedy cane and wear big horn-rimmed spectacles. Menjou was always a sartorial masterpiece and the studio bosses just couldn't figure out how a dresser-upper could possibly be a comic. There was, to be sure, one well-dressed comedian of that time, Sidney Drew, who played in two-reelers with his wife but he wasn't so very hot at the box office. Like Menjou, Drew had come from the stage to pictures. A brother of the famous John Drew, he had never been successful either in the "legit" or on the screen. There was an old Broadway quip which ran: "John Drew, but Sidney couldn't." And Winchell can't claim that one. Broadway used it before he was born.

But all this time that Menjou was struggling with romantic leads and parts which fitted only his well-tailored suits he was essentially a light comedian. When the studio bosses finally awoke to the fact and re-typed him, Adolphe climbed back into fame overnight.

Menjou's case has been just one of many. Of course, a lot of players have failed to hold on and have dropped out of sight but pretty often, there's been a second chance in Hollywood for a player who isn't doing so well, by way of the re-typing route.

Remember Clark Gable as the heavy in "The Painted Desert?" And William Powell as the rat in "Beau Geste"?

Both were merely plugging along in the wrong groove in those days. Then each was given a chance to do something different — and achieved stardom.

Carole Lombard, Myrna Loy, Merle Oberon, Bette Davis and Edmund Lowe are a few more who had to be re-typed before reaching the heights. But re-typing is a gamble that has ruined more careers than it has made.

LATEST to take the long chance is George Raft, whom you'll see in a new type of role with Gary Cooper in Paramount's saga of sailing ships, "Souls at Sea."

Raft got tired of playing city slickers. He wearied of dapper clothes and patent-leather hair, speaking out of the side of his mouth, wearing shoulder holsters and being another "Valentino" on the dance floor.

He got so tired of it all, in fact, that he quarreled with his studio, which was perfectly satisfied with things as they were. There's no telling how the matter might have ended if Director Henry Hathaway hadn't come along with an idea.

He wanted Raft for the colorful role of Powdah in "Souls at Sea."

Powdah was down in the script as an ignorant, rough-and-tough bucko mate of the '40s, with unlubricated hair and a gold ring in his ear. Further, he had numerous long speeches to say, and Raft had a horror of long speeches. Had trouble learning them as a matter of fact. He wanted to be re-typed but didn't think much of rough hair and an earring.

Hathaway finally talked him into the role, hammered away to get him better perfect in the lines and when you see, before very long, "Souls at Sea," you'll see an entirely different George Raft. Paramount is so pleased with the new-found character that Raft's days as a city slicker are probably over for a long time.

Another gangster who is being re-typed is Ben Welden. Never heard of him? Well, small wonder, for he has been making pictures, American gangster pictures, in England for 10 years. He is an American, though, with, when the occasion demands, a genuine pip of a "What ho" or "No end" accent picked up in London. Has it already for instant use in pictures, but so far, not even in England, has he had the opportunity, for he has been upholding the traditions of American gangsterdom on the British stage and screen ever since Chicago became an important date-line on news stories of crime.

Anyway, Welden went to England to show the British what American gangsters looked like, and how to pronounce American underworld slang. Now that the British demand for British-made American gangster films is over, Welden is back in Hollywood.

He is not playing gangsters. Instead, he is playing Paul Cezanne, most influential of the modern French painters, in the Paul Muni picture, "The Story of Emile Zola." It is his first crack in over 10 years at anything legal.

Nathan Milstein to Close Principia Season on Friday

NATHAN MILSTEIN, young Russian violinist, will bring the Principia Concert and Lecture Course to a close for this season with a recital at 8:15 o'clock Friday evening in Howard Hall, on the St. Louis campus.

Milstein, already a favorite with St. Louis music audiences through his previous concert with the Civic Music League, and appearances with the St. Louis Symphony, is on his eighth tour of the United States.

Born in Odessa 33 years ago, he studied first in his native city, then in Petrograd. His early years as a concert artist were spent touring Russia, then followed the period of the revolution, in which he labored with great difficulty to perfect his art. At 19, a brilliant but still unknown artist, he was touring Russia, playing joint recitals with a friend of his own age, the pianist, Vladimir Horowitz.

In 1925, Milstein left Russia, to arrive in Paris without money or a violin. A backer was found for a debut, however, and a patron with a valuable Stradivarius. The debut was the first step on the way to international fame.

Film Blending Makes an Epic

By Colvin McPherson

GOING back to the days when the Russian double eagle could still hold its heads up, and when the only Five-Year Plan was how to get out of Siberia, "The Soldier and the Lady," at the Fox, revives that literary and dramatic success of a half century ago—Jules Verne's "Michael Strogoff." The new title is merely discreet sugar-coating, for the picture is Verne's rough-and-tumble scenario, nothing more, nothing less.

The picture itself deserves some special attention, in that it is an American-European hybrid. Producer Joseph Ermolieff's French film, "Michael Strogoff," was bought outright by Hollywood; its star, Anton Walbrook, shipped across the Atlantic, and new scenes filmed with a change of cast. Result, a splendid motion picture, under any title. Exciting, adventurous, vigorous, with all the thrills of a super-Western and then some.

"Michael Strogoff," one of the few instances in which Verne gave up his gift of prophecy for contemporary adventure, is about a courier sent by the Czar to his brother, the Grand Duke, in Siberia, at the time of a mythical Tartar rebellion. Since communications are cut off, the courier has little to help him other than his indomitable spirit. Soon enough he falls into the hands of the traitor, Ivan Ogareff, and is tortured in Oriental style.

These scenes are pretty brutal stuff, worse than the horrors of "Mutiny on the Bounty" and likely to make even strong nerves uncomfortable. Strogoff's mother is mistreated, too, and dramatic moments accompany the melodramatic. But Michael carries on, to reach the Grand Duke, expose the traitor and put an end to him in a blood-spattered finish. Terrific action, but that's exactly as Jules Verne thought it up.

Against European backgrounds, "The Soldier and the Lady" resembles many Russian films. Audiences are treated to strange rivers, mountains and wide plains that California can't duplicate. The Slavic villages, the forts and the cities all have a solid and authentic look, and that white sunlight in which all California pictures are filmed is toned down. How much of the scenery is Russian, we movie-goers may only guess. Hollywood is pretty coy about giving anybody else credit, and would just as soon have us believe that they did it all with their little hatchets.

The action scenes are imported, and anybody could tell that. The Bulgarian Army, fighting on both sides at the battle of Pulev and siege of Irkutsk, does things in a professional way that is just different from the Los Angeles County manner. The big battle charges are not simply set on display, as in "The Charge of the Light Brigade," but are fought in fury, with the camera left to catch-as-catch-can.

Walbrook, an Austrian actor, is a strong-hearted and sincere Michael, with several exceptionally fine scenes, particularly the one where Ogareff lashes him at the inn and he has to control his impulse to kill the traitor. Akim Tamiroff, Russian himself, imparts to Ogareff all the barbaric strains of character inherent in Ogareff's background. Margot Grahame does the spy, Sangarre, made more important than in the novel, Elizabeth is Nadia and Leonard Ceeley, once of Municipal Opera, takes care of a bit of perfidy.

The big news in the cast is the performance of Fay Bainter, as Strogoff's little Russian mother. Since the Academy has created an award for the best supporting role of the year, hers can be a nomination right now.

The Fox varies its mood with a Joe E. Brown comedy, "When's Your Birthday?" That fine clown plays a young man who goes in for astrology and has to make good on one of his main predictions, the result in a prizefight, by fighting it himself.

The King and the Chorus Girl.

WHEN you read that one of the authors of a screen play is Groucho Marx, you know there's devilment in the air. And no less than the amiable Groucho is co-author, with Norman Krasna, of "The King and the Chorus Girl" at the Ambassador. From the first flash of the King's ancestors to his honeymoon with the chorus lady at Niagara Falls, the film is a grandest lot of tomfoolery to come this way in months.

It introduces, generally speaking, a new star to St. Louis, although some citizens of good memory may recall the charming gentleman who contributed so much to a British picture called "The Runaway Queen" at the Ambassador two years ago. Fernand Gravet ("Grav-VAY"), whose name then was Fernand Graavey, plays the ex-King this week. And looks a whole lot like a certain ex-King who gave up everything for love and Mrs. Simpson.

He is in Paris, bored to a bender, when his entourage of two, Edward Everett Horton and Mary Nash, decide something has to be done to wean him away from the brandy bottle. They take him to the Folies Bergere, and miracle of miracles, the right girl flirts with him. It isn't long until the King has given up his bad habits and is giving Joan a royal rush. Boy has to lose girl before the romance is clinched, but that is done in the best of ruling families.

Any reviewer of "The King and the Chorus Girl" must yearn to quote its priceless lines, but its pleasure ought not to be spoiled in that manner. It should be enough to say that the film has a glorious sense of humor and to give these tips: Don't go in the middle of the picture and do listen for all the nifty remarks. Mr. Marx and Mr. Krasna do a fast lot of smart-cracking and you are liable to miss some of it.

Gravet has just about everything a leading man needs except height, even the Duke's slightly tipped-forward walk. Good-looking, romantic, fine comedian, fine dramatic actor. And Joan Blondell, trouper if there ever was one, plays up to every moment. Perhaps the two principals are left a little too much to themselves, perhaps there ought to be more music, since what there is, is of the best, but "The King and the Chorus Girl" must be hailed as something most extraordinary.

The second picture, "China Passage," may be safely used for arrival and departure time. A minor cast plays, "Diamond, diamond, who's got the diamond?" across the Pacific and several persons, but not enough, are carried out feet first.

The St. Louis Theater's first-run film, "Devil's Playground," is the only other new picture of the week. Richard Dix is the greatest diver in the navy, Chester Morris his pal. They both get mixed up with the same girl, Dolores del Rio, and Dix, much against his will, has to rescue Morris from a sunken submarine.

On the St. Louis stage, Adair and Richards have two attractive ballroom and adag,' dance numbers, King, King and King do some tricky tap work and Stone and Lee, comedy team, finish off the bill. The main success is the Roxyette's "ball routine," repeated from last week.

At Loew's Theater, the Jeanette MacDonald-Nelson Eddy operetta, "Maytime," continues its prosperous engagement. "Quality Street" and "Seventh Heaven," two other holdovers from last week, are at the Missouri.

Lunt-Fontanne Combination To American in 'Idiot's Delight'

Theater Guild Stars Back to Town After Five Years.

WITH all indications of a record-breaking engagement ahead of it, the Pulitzer Prize Play, "Idiot's Delight," starring Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, comes to the American Theater tomorrow night. Eight performances are to be given, including the Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

"Idiot's Delight," a comedy drama by Robert Sherwood, takes place in the cocktail lounge of the Hotel Monte Gabrielle in the Italian Alps, and the title refers to the game that two great powers of Europe start playing before the last curtain comes down—war. Italy and France are the powers and the Hotel Monte Gabrielle, located near an Italian air base, is in direct line of fire.

But while the war gods work themselves into a fury, two hotel guests find opportunity to renew an acquaintance. These are Harry Van, leader of an American vaudeville troupe, and the mysterious Irene, inamorata of a munitions maker. Van, played by Alfred Lunt, thinks he recognizes the pseudo-Russian Irene, Miss Fontanne, as the girl with whom he had an affair in the United States years before. When bombs begin blasting the hotel away, the two crouch, reunited, under a table.

The other hotel guests are a pacifist who talks too much, a German scientist who loses his air of scholarly detachment under stress, two giddy English honeymooners, the munitions maker and Van's troupe of blondes.

The Theater Guild production which the Lunts bring to St. Louis is the same, even in minor players, that ran for 300 performances on Broadway and the present coast-to-coast tour was begun while "Idiot's Delight" was still one of New York's most popular hits. The play originally opened in March, 1936, ran until July 4 and after a summer vacation, came back to an enthusiastic public.

The Lunts themselves, for whom Sherwood wrote "Reunion in Vienna" some years ago, were enthusiastic about "Idiot's Delight" when Sherwood first walked into their dressing-room in New York, with the manuscript under his arm, and turned it over to them. They were at that time appearing in their highly comic and highly successful version of "The Taming of the Shrew" but decided to close it and present the new play.

Taking over most of the Shakespearean cast, they began rehearsals immediately. A month of touring in "The Taming of the Shrew" was necessary to complete Guild subscription obligations in several cities, but preparation for "Idiot's Delight" were not delayed. Lunt took singing lessons from Sophie Tucker and soft-shoe dancing from Morgan Lewis. Six chorus girls were chosen from a list of nearly 1000 applicants.

Working 18 hours out of 24 at times, the company got ready for a Washington opening, went on to Pittsburgh, ran into the flood of last spring and thoroughly bedraggled turned to New York. But with only 72 hours to clean up and rehearse, the cast and stage staff whipped everything in shape and opened to great success.

The week in St. Louis will be the Lunts' first visit here since 1932, when they played "Reunion in Vienna," at the American. They were seen previously here in "Elizabeth the Queen" and "Caprice." Since their last appearance they have done two Noel Coward plays, "Design for Living" and "Point Valaine," the first a success, the latter a failure, and "The Taming of the Shrew." Rarely separated in the theater since their marriage in 1924, they have been in some 16 plays together. Their one motion picture, "The Guardsmen," was voted one of the 10 best pictures of 1932.

In the cast with them are Richard Whorf, Sydney Greenstreet, George Meader, Bretaigne Windust, who also directed the play, Jean Macintyre, Francis Compton, Edward Raquello, Barry Thompson, S. Thomas Gomes and others. Una Val, Municipal Opera dancer of the last two seasons, has one of the minor roles, that of a maid. The single setting was designed by Lee Simonson, the dances staged by Morgan Lewis.

The author, Robert E. Sherwood, is a man with war experience himself, having served with the Canadian army in France from 1917 to 1919. Former editor and motion picture critic, he has written several other well-known plays, among them "The Road to Rome," "The Queen's Husband" and "The Petrified Forest." He did the screen play for "The Ghost Goes West" and "The Scarlet Pimpernel" and recently finished the script of "Adventures of Marco Polo." He is a brother of Arthur Sherwood, whose comedy, "Celestial Holiday," is being played by the Little Theater.

TALLULAH BANKHEAD, who has never played on the stage in St. Louis, will follow the Lunts to the American on April 12. The Southern actress, daughter of Speaker William B. Bankhead of the House of Representatives, will be seen in a George Kelly comedy, 'Reflected Glory," which had a four-months' run on Broadway earlier in the season.

The theme of the play is an actress' emotional disturbance over what she believes is her true romance, and her career. Kelly will be remembered as the author of "The Show-Off" and the Pulitzer prize drama, "Craig's Wife." Occupied with writing for the screen, he had done nothing for the stage in seven years until he drafted "Reflected Glory."

Miss Bankhead, better known as an actress in London than in the United States, spent six years on the London stage, went from there to Hollywood, and since has played almost entirely in New York.

Another actress of great success in London and New York follows Miss Bankhead. She is Ruth Draper, who has not toured the United States for nearly 10 years, and who canceled an annual six-weeks' booking in London in order to cross the country. She presents a "one-woman" show of character sketches, pantomime and monologue, an art of which she is generally regarded as the chief exponent. She comes to the American for three days, beginning April 19. "Lost Horizon," the Frank Capra film, follows on April 22, to close the American's season.

Philadelphia Orchestra Concert on April 26

The Philadelphia Orchestra, under the direction of Eugene Ormandy, will come to the Auditorium Opera House on Monday evening, April 26, for a concert under auspices of the Civic Music League, which sponsored its appearance here last spring.

The orchestra's tour this year is from coast to coast, over a 13,000-mile route and requiring six weeks' continuous traveling. The 104 members of the party will have accommodations on a streamlined train of 10 cars, carefully scheduled to allow for 30 concerts in 25 cities.

Mummers in Farce

The Mummers' next production will be "Three in a Row," Clothilde Graves' comedy of the '80s, which is set for Thursday, April 15, and Saturday, April 17, at the Wednesday Club. "Three in a Row," a farce characteristic of the times in which it first appeared, has to do with the Murgatroyd triplets, adored by their mother but completely unknown to their father until they grow up.

Oscar Seagle Recital

Oscar Seagle, noted baritone and voice teacher, will give a lecture-recital at the Park Plaza Hotel at 8:30 o'clock this evening. Corinne Frederick, St. Louis pianist, will be his accompanist. Seagle, long an associate of Jean de Reszke in France and described by De Reszke as his best pupil, conducts a studio in New York and a summer music colony in the Adirondacks.

SEA SCOUTS TO OPEN THEIR BASE APRIL 17

Special Training Programs on Creve Coeur Lake and Mississippi River.

Boats, rope and other equipment, unused during the winter, will be put in ship-shape order by Sea Scouts during week-end work cruises to be sponsored by the sea scout division of the St. Louis Council, Boy Scouts of America, in preparation for the opening April 17, of the base at Creve Coeur Lake.

In addition to the summer program at Creve Coeur, special training will be provided by the Council for crews of advanced scouts. A self-bailing motor boat, assigned for the work by the United States Coast Guard, will be used on the Mississippi River to teach correct methods of rescue and emergency relief work.

Fishing, boating, swimming and hiking facilities will be available at a senior scout camp, the place for which has not as yet been selected, but which again this year will be run on the order of Wilderness Camp operated by the Council last summer at Owl Bend, Mo.

The same camp program will be followed, except that the troops attending will be the units for discipline and activities and a larger staff will be provided. Explorer patrols of troops 41, 108, 83, 90 and 342 already have registered. Camp will open June 20 to continue in two-week sections until Aug. 1.

All St. Louis scouts who attend the first National Jamboree in Washington in June would visit the Library of Congress to see the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence, John D. Wright, scout executive who will accompany the delegation, announced yesterday.

The St. Louis Council will be represented by seven units; five National Jamboree troops, an International Jamboree troop that will go to Europe for the International Jamboree, and a Sea Scout Ship. Members of the seven units will visit New York, Atlantic City and Philadelphia.

Troop Notes.

Scouts interested in joining a new sea scout ship have been asked to telephone Wilbur Finger, LAclede 1628, or attend a meeting Wednesday at 7:30 p. m. at 3445 Morganford road.

The first meeting of the new Troop 229, sponsored by the Riverview School District, was held on Thursday. Clifton E. Johnson is scoutmaster and E. M. LeMasters is chairman of the troop committee.

Raboni Chapter of the Order of De Molay, Webster Groves, is now sponsoring Troop 305 instead of the Presbyterian Church of Webster Groves, which continues its sponsorship of Troop 307.

Webster Groves Cub Pack 43 gave its "Cub Follies of 1937" at a cub-parents' night, Friday.

Girl Scouts.

Mrs. Louis Burlingham, 4623 Maryland avenue, vice-president of Girl Scouts, will be one of the representatives of the Girl Scout national board of directors at the annual spring conference with representatives of local councils of Arizona, Texas, New Mexico and Oklahoma to be held in Dallas, Tex., April 16 and 17.

Recommendations of a recent study of the Girl Scout program made by sociologists and educators under the direction of Charles H. Young of McGill and Chicago universities, will be discussed at the conference, as will other problems affecting the southwest region.

Officers for 1937 of the Brownie Leaders' Association will be elected and installed at a dinner meeting Wednesday at 6:30 p. m. at St. John's M. E. Church, Kingshighway boulevard and Washington avenue.

The second of five meetings of a Girl Scout troop and Brownie Pack committee training course will be held in scheduled locations except the course in the south district, which will be held Tuesday at 9:30 a. m. at the Rose Fanning School, 3417 Grace avenue, instead of at Carpenter Branch Library.

The south district committee of the St. Louis Council will meet Wednesday at 10 a. m. at the home of Mrs. John Calhoun, 3523 Longfellow boulevard.

Problems of American Medicine; Doctors Give Views Pro and Con On Change in Present System

Ideas of Leading Physicians Collected for Preliminary Report of Foundation Studies in Government.

Problems of American medicine, as they affect the public and as they affect the physician, are discussed in a preliminary report of the American Foundation Studies in Government, soon to be issued in two-volume form.

The American Foundation has collected views of leading physicians throughout the United States, including six in St. Louis, on a collection of questions, centering about the query:

"Has your experience led you to believe that a radical change in the present organization of medical care is indicated?"

The matter presented to the physicians was not in questionnaire form, and the contributors were invited to ask and answer the questions which seemed to them of most importance.

St. Louisans Represented.

"American Medicine: Expert Testimony Out of Court" is the title of the two volumes, comprising 1500 pages, to be issued by the American Foundation as the result of this inquiry. St. Louis members of the Medical Advisory Committee, which joined with the American Foundation in presenting the report, are Dr. Charles H. Eyermann, Dr. Ellis Fischel, Dr. Moyer S. Fleisher, Dr. Evarts A. Graham, Dr. Fred J. Taussig and Dr. Borden Smith Veeder.

The governing committee of the American Foundation, with headquarters at 565 Fifth avenue, New York, is headed by Curtis Bok as chairman. One of the 11 other members is Bishop William Scarlett of St. Louis, head of the Episcopal diocese of (Eastern) Missouri. Dr. Truman G. Schnabel, associate professor of medicine in the University of Pennsylvania, is medical member of the committee.

In its preliminary report, outlining the book's contents, the American Foundation says that the questions presented have been "discussed rather than answered, various answers having been given to each question, with the idea that the reader will be able to choose among alternatives presented."

About State Medicine.

This method of treatment appears in the chapter dealing with the topic of state medicine, that term being held to indicate the payment and control of physicians by the government.

The views in favor of state medicine rest on the premise that there can be no real distinction between public health and private health; that abuses in the present system, such as fee-splitting, can be remedied only by state medicine; that state medicine, whether or not desirable, is coming.

Those opposing state medicine object to socializing medicine in an otherwise capitalistic system, express fear of political control, express distrust of governmental efficiency, fear jeopardizing research and destroying the doctor-patient relation. State medicine in Sweden is briefly touched upon.

A basic question, discussed in one form or another by many of the contributing physicians, was: "Is adequate medical care now generally available?"

If medical care is interpreted to mean the kind of care needed to maintain positive health, preventing incipient illness from progressing to serious consequences, as well as working to restore the sick individual to health, the weight of opinion is that adequate medical care is not available.

Even if adequate medical care is less ambitiously defined, this section tends to show that a large part of the population does not receive adequate medical care (a) because it costs too much, especially hospital service and the laboratory aids to diagnosis; (b) because it is too far away—as in agricultural areas far removed from medical centers and without either hospitals or practitioners; (c) because the public generally does not understand and is not asking for modern scientific medical care, much of the population definitely preferring quacks, cultists and patent medicines; and, finally (d) because in the medical care of the present "the best is not yet good enough," to quote one of the writers.

Reasons why medical care is not yet good enough include these: (a) there is a lag of years in applying new medical knowledge; (b) present medical training is not yet uniformly good; (c) present licensing is too broad; (d) too many graduates do not or cannot keep up their competence; (e) medical imagination still does not sufficiently perceive that prevention rather than cure is the real and ultimate goal of medical science.

Principles of Medical Care.

The problem of providing adequate medical care is complex, and there is no simple solution for it. This correspondence is therefore analyzed, and the views presented place emphasis on nine outstanding principles:

1. The problem of medical care is bound up with the social and economic problem as a whole. Medicine, in the views expressed, must mesh with the gears of general society and of economics.

Some of those who lack adequate medical care, it is suggested, lack also adequate anything; the real solution would be a living wage for everybody employable. Medical care consists of many things beside advice and medicine. The achievement of public health involves factors besides medical science; the attack must be made upon a broader front.

There is the view that the depression has caused the present crisis, as to medical care, and that it will pass with the depression; and the contrary view that the depression merely disclosed permanent defects hidden from the general view in more prosperous times.

2. It is necessary to define the objective of medical science and practice—is it merely the care of the sick in illness, or the promotion of positive health for the whole population?

3. Who is responsible for the health of the individual? It is necessary to define the extent to which, in a modern industrial society, with unemployment and lack of a living wage as permanent hazards, the individual can be held responsible for his own health.

4. The public conception of health is a controlling factor: Adequate medical care assumes a public that understands it, wants it, and is capable of receiving it. The present extent of quackery and wide use of nostrums emphasizes the fact that a better educated public is a condition precedent to any nation-wide plan for making adequate medical care generally available.

5. The parties in interest are the medical profession, the public and the Government and all three must together seek the answer to the problem of supplying adequate medical care to the whole population. The degree to which government has responsibility must be pre-determined.

6. There is agreement on the principle that the individual should pay, in some manner, in accordance with his capacity to pay, and that there is need for establishing indigence, by just and generous means and with no implication of delinquency, and determining degrees of capacity to pay.

Some express the view that there is abuse at present of facilities intended for the indigent and the "medically indigent" (those who generally pay their way but have no margin for medical care) and that this abuse raises costs for the middle class.

7. There is animated discussion as to the doctor-patient relation and the free choice of physician. It is admitted that the "art of medicine" has frequently been exploited at the expense of the science and that the doctor-patient relation ought certainly not to be made to serve as a substitute for diagnosis; but there is also the view that after the doctor-patient relation has been stripped of purely sentimental values genuine therapeutic values remain.

8. Evolution versus revolution in the reorganization of medical care: While certain groups advocate sharp and complete change, the view seems fairly general that even thoroughgoing change will best be worked out by evolutionary process.

9. The quality of medical care must be the determinant in all planning. The physicians insist that no program of reform will succeed that is based wholly on economic considerations. They feel that social economists in the past, in dealing with the subject of medical care, have perhaps been more concerned with the cost and distribution of medical service than with the quality and character of the care itself. Medical care is neither a commodity nor a constant, and any distributive schemes that so assume are destined to fail. The view is expressed that the best service that can be rendered to those in need of medical care is to improve the quality of medical care and the personnel of the profession.

However the problem may be defined, it cannot be defined as making mediocre medical care available to a greater number of people. Better medicine, say the doctors, is more important than better distribution and lower costs.

Insurance and Groups.

Health insurance and group practice—the latter referring to groups of physicians rather than of prospective patients—are two of the controverted themes. On the subject of insurance, some contributors feel that only compulsory insurance can meet the situation and that every one should be compelled to save for medical care.

Objections to insurance include the feeling that it always has a demoralizing effect on patients—and on doctors; that it is not suited to American institutions, and that it offers no help to the indigent, the care of whom constitutes a grave part of the present need.

As to voluntary insurance, the view is generally held that there can be no reasonable objection to individuals and groups insuring themselves as they see fit. Few seem to feel that voluntary insurance furnishes an answer to present difficulties, since those most in need of insurance either will not arrange to take it or cannot pay the premiums.

Hospital insurance is fully discussed, and accounts are given of hospital plans in operation in six places. Contributors agree that it seems to furnish one kind of answer to the present financial crisis of the hospitals, and also to the problem caused by the inability of the low income group to meet the cost of hospitalization. Those who believe that, in the long run, tax support will be needed for hospitals feel that the hospital insurance movement may obscure what they regard as the permanent solution.

The group practice discussion centers about the question whether medicine has become too complex to be administered by individuals; if so, it is held, the medicine of the future will be practiced by groups of specialists. At present, it is held, physicians do not call other physicians into consultation so frequently as they should do, perhaps because this might suggest to the patient that they have not sufficient confidence in their own diagnoses. There are varying views as to whether group practice lowers or increases medical costs.

Place of the Hospital.

In the discussion of "The Place of the Hospital," the need for community hospitals is presented on one hand and, on the other, the undesirability of multiplying the number of small independent hospitals. Establishment of hospitals, it is held, should not run ahead of provisions for adequate staffing.

Under the head of "Limited State Medicine and Private Practice" there is a summary of what has been done under social security appropriations in improving the public health services in various states.

It is pointed out that year after year additional diseases are considered to be "endowed with a public interest" involving governmental functioning. The list steadily increases; tuberculosis, cancer, pneumonia and syphilis have already an admitted "public" status; and there are, in various states, proposals for including diseases of the heart and circulatory system, arthritis and other diseases which have been shown to be a large factor in disability among the population, and which require a treatment too long and too expensive to be within the financial compass of most persons.

The current attempt at venereal disease control comes in for special comment, and the need of cooperation between public health authorities and private practitioners is illustrated by reference to the methods required for detecting, diagnosing and treating this disease—and the impossibility of sharply separating the preventive and the curative functions.

There is a discussion of Federal responsibility for providing medical care in sparsely populated communities and in areas where uncertainty of crops, drouth and other hazards are characteristic and where state funds are uncertain and insufficient.

There is a summary of the large body of opinion that regards the medical care of the indigent as a logical and direct charge upon tax funds, local to the greatest practicable degree but with state aid, and Federal aid under certain conditions and in certain places.

A Federal Department of Health is frequently proposed as justified under the present powers and degree of functioning of the Federal Government in matters of health; and as imperative with the proposed increases in this function indicated by the present appropriations of the Social Security Act and by such proposals as Federal grants-in-aid for care of the indigent sick.

There is a passing reference to the possibility of interpreting (presumably by constitutional amendment) the general welfare clause of the Constitution to enable the Federal Government to establish national health authority.

"Medical Education" and "Specialization" are other principal chapter headings. In connection with the former, state licensing laws are criticised as "too numerous and too broad." As to the latter, the complaint is that there are too many poor specialists and not enough good ones."

Spanish Ambassador to U. S. A Scholar and Liberal, Author Of Freedom of Religion Act

Says Only 25 Per Cent of Franco's Rebel Army Is Spanish, With Mass of People on Loyalists' Side.

By MARQUIS W. CHILDS,
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.
WASHINGTON, April 3.

THE handsome two-storied ballroom of the Spanish embassy here has been converted to a use for which it was never intended. On large screens placed about the room are mounted many photographs of the suffering and destruction that has resulted from Spain's prolonged civil war, together with striking posters appealing to Spaniards to support the Loyalist Government.

Here, although it is 3000 miles away from the theater of the war, one can feel the impact of that bloody and bitter conflict. Not only Ambassador Fernando de los Rios but all the secretaries and attaches live for word that comes from the various fronts. At least two or three times each week the Ambassador telephones to Madrid and on other days diplomatic dispatches bring the latest news.

Just off the handsome patio, with its fountain and its orange trees, is a news ticker that brings late press dispatches from war-torn Spain. Only a skeleton staff of servants has been retained, and the Ambassador and his family live in quiet simplicity when they are not occupied with official functions.

Ambassador de los Rios feels that it is a part of his duty to make Americans understand what is regards as the real nature of the conflict that has been raging in Spain for so many months. While he observes scrupulously, of course, the conventions imposed on an ambassador, who naturally must not be a propagandist, De los Rios thinks it is essential to bring certain facts to the attention of the American public.

What the War Is About.

The Ambassador feels that in many quarters in this, a sister republic, there has been a serious misapprehension as to what the civil war in Spain is about. That war, says De los Rios, has grown out of the effort of a democratic, duly elected Government — the Loyalist Government — to defend itself from armed Fascist aggression which in recent months has been of preponderantly foreign origin. If the Rebels triumph, according to De los Rios, Spain will be merely a dependency of Italy and Italian and German Fascists will convert his country into a military base in preparation for an attack on other powers.

Ambassador de los Rios is singularly well equipped to present his point of view in this country, for he represents the highest type of Spanish culture. In the phrase that has fallen into disuse, perhaps the species has become so rare, he is a scholar and a gentleman.

Like so many others who are now filling important offices in Spain's diplomatic service, De los Rios has had no previous diplomatic experience. It is in general true that an extreme conservatism colors the diplomatic services of virtually every country in the world. Diplomats, young and old, are often men of wealth, not infrequently aristocrats who venerate the aristocratic tradition, partly because the diplomatic service has retained so many formalisms and punctilios from an earlier age.

Outbreak of Revolution.

Spain's diplomatic corps was no exception to this rule. At the outbreak of the revolution last year a number of Spanish diplomats who symphathized with the Fascists resigned. That was true of the former Spanish Ambassador here in Washington, Luis Calderon, and all the members of his staff. After the attaches and secretaries had departed, Calderon stayed on in the embassy, refusing to see visitors or newspaper men, merely waiting for his successor to be named by the Loyalist Government. In other parts of the world more or less serious incidents occurred. Senora Isabella de Palencia was named minister to Sweden by the Madrid Government but when she arrived in Stockholm to take over, the old Minister refused to leave the legation, insisting he was still the representative of Spain. Calderon willingly surrendered the keys of the embassy to de los Rios when the latter arrived in Washington last fall.

At the time of his appointment as Ambassador, de los Rios was rector of the University of Madrid, the highest academic post in Spain. He came to this post after a long and distinguished career in scholarship and public service. His father was Jose de los Rios Pinzon, who had been military governor of one of the Philippine Islands. From an early age de los Rios was intended for an academic career. After a preliminary education at Cordoba, the family moved to Madrid and at the University there de los Rios took first the course in philosophy, then a part of the course in medicine and finally the law course, in which he received a doctorate. Next he went to the Sorbonne in Paris, where he continued the study of philosophy, political science, economics and law.

Teacher in Liberal College.

Returning to Spain, he worked with his uncle and teacher, the distinguished Spanish philosopher, Francisco Giner de los Rios. At the same time he began his own teaching career at the Free Institute of Teaching. This is a primary and secondary co-educational college founded in 1877. In this liberal institution, which has no religious affiliations, most of the Republican leaders of the past 30 years have been trained. It has had a profound influence on modern thought in Spain.

Somewhat later de los Rios went to the University of London and, for a time, to the London School of Economics. Finally the Spanish Government sent him to Germany to continue his studies at the Universities of Jena, Berlin and Marburg. Taking highest honors in a competitive examination, he was awarded the chair of political law and political science at the University of Granada, which he held from 1911 to 1930. From there he went, in 1930, again by virtue of taking first place in a competitive examination, to the chair of graduate studies at the University of Madrid.

As Minister of Justice.

Taking a minor part in politics as a liberal, de los Rios later became a member of the Socialist party. When the republic was established in 1931, he was named Minister of Justice. Immediately he undertook certain reforms that he held to be fundamental if Spain was to become a modern democracy. He drafted the law that was subsequently passed decreeing freedom of worship and also the law that stirred wide controversy providing for secularization of the cemeteries. He is the author, too, of the proposed law on divorce.

Following his service as Minister of Justice, de los Rios was made Minister of Education and to this post he brought all his broad knowledge and training in the academic world. In space of a few years he effected remarkable changes in the educational system of a country which has had one of the highest illiteracy rates in Europe. One of his unique contributions to modern education was the Traveling Uni-

Young Prosecutor's War on Organized Crime

Racketeers Who Prey on Business Convicted by Novel Methods

Thomas Edmund Dewey Has Won 58 Convictions on 66 Indictments — Adroit in Tripping Underworld Chieftains.

Crime Syndicated — Actual Gang Head Rarely Commits Overt Act — Conspiracy Law Catches Master-Minds.

By RICHARD L. STOKES
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.
NEW YORK, April 3.

IF any crime-beset American city desires to shake off the reign of the underworld, which threatens, in the opinion of authorities, to obtain control of American industry, labor and government, the way has been pointed by New York. Here, with the support of public-spirited citizens, a 35-year-old special Assistant District Attorney, Thomas Edmund Dewey, has made himself the figure most dreaded in the world of the lawless. Because of his youth and medium stature, he has been referred to as the "baby prosecutor" and "Jack-the-Giant Killer."

Operating with a staff of 75 he has, in the last 19 months, obtained 58 convictions out of 66 indictments. Of the eight who escaped sentence, one killed himself, one turned State's evidence, two obtained mistrials and four are fugitives from justice.

Amazingly Successful Despite Three Big Handicaps

The amazing percentage of convictions was achieved against three handicaps which ordinarity would prove fatal. During the entire period, Dewey has had the aid of not a single unreluctant witness. In each of his major investigations, the key policeman had been "reached" and has "gone wrong." In addition to being unwilling, his witnesses were generally almost as disreputable as the defendants themselves—to such an extent, as one of his assistants phrased it, that "we were ashamed to put them on the stand."

The set-up of his campaign is as non-partisan as could be imagined. Dewey himself is a Republican. He was appointed by a New Deal Governor and serves nominally under a Tammany District Attorney. The appropriations for financing his investigations, and the squad of detectives and patrolmen at his disposal, were supplied at the instance of a fusion Mayor, Fiorello LaGuardia. The Justices of the Supreme Court of New York County in charge of two grand juries which return his indictments are Philip J. McCook, a Republican, and Ferdinand Pecora, a Democrat.

The basic requisites for an effective crusade against organized crime in any community, according to the practice of Dewey's office, are as follows:

A non-political prosecuting agency.

Upright trial judges.

Independent courageous grand and trial juries.

An honest police head.

Of the first of these four essentials Dewey made sure through the conditions under which he accepted appointment as special prosecutor from Gov. Lehman on June 19, 1935, and quit a private law practice of $50,000 a year for a public one with an annual salary of $16,700. These conditions were complete independence of the District Attorney's office, freedom to select his own staff and adequate appropriations for long-range inquiries.

An upright trial magistrate he found in Justice McCook, and an honest chief in Lewis J. Valentine, Police Commissioner of New York City. His grand and trial juries have been so carefully selected, among men whose circumstances should render them immune to pressure from politics, labor or business, that they are often referred to as "hand-picked" or "blue-ribbon" panels.

Reaching the Big Shots Who Don't Commit Crimes.

In addition, out of his earlier experience with Federal methods as an Assistant United States Attorney, Dewey has evolved a fresh technique in dealing with lawbreakers. It is based in this startling new maxim: "Big criminals no longer commit crimes." According to members of Dewey's staff, Al Capone never directly perpetrated a felony throughout his career in Chicago; and Charles ("Lucky") Luciano, New York's No. 1 gangster, whom Dewey sent to prison for from 30 to 50 years, had not individually committed a crime for 10 years prior to his conviction.

It was not difficult, Dewey found, to arrest and convict the obscure tool, guilty of assault or extortion. But the racket itself went on without a moment's interruption. The State codes, courts and police procedure were still operating on a theory that became obsolete 20 years ago—that justice is satisfied when the actual pickpocket or strong-arm man is sentenced. It had no provision for apprehending and punishing the major criminal of the latest model, who takes pains never to commit personally the least breach of the law, who is usually unknown save by name to his agents, and who will nevertheless direct and reward their crimes.

One of First Moves; New State Conspiracy Statute.

One of Dewey's first acts was to persuade the New York Legislature, through Gov. Lehman, to adopt a "conspiracy statute" which had been for 70 years in the Federal code, and under which it became possible to hold joint trials of different but connected offenses. Thus the prosecutor found himself able to focus the evidence in dozens of cases upon the hidden master-criminal who had directed them all. In a letter to the Governor, Dewey said:

Today crime is syndicated and organized. The new type of criminal leaves to his hirelings the actual offenses, and rarely commits overt acts himself. The only way in which these major criminals can be punished is by reaching them through various layers of subordinates who commit separate but related acts in their behalf.

This fundamental strategy Dewey has implemented with various tactics of his own. One is that of indicting a defendant on a great number of counts. This has served a double purpose. In case the offense was a misdemeanor, like the practice of usury, it proved possible in many cases to obtain an aggregate sentence of as much as five years. But the chief use of the device was to exact prohibitive and fantastic bail. Luciano was indicted on 90 counts of compulsory prostitution, and convicted on 62. Thus it became practicable to hold him under custody in New York under a total bail of $350,000.

Material witnesses are also detained under prohibitive bonds. This prevents their being tampered with, and also protects their lives. Thanks to that precaution, Dewey has never "lost a witness." In blunter words no one of his witnesses has been murdered. Twenty-four hours prior to his "white slave" raid, he quietly gathered into custody and held incommunicado all the bail bondsmen operating at the Jefferson Market Court.

Still another of his devices is that of such minute and thorough preparation of evidence that his case is virtually completed before an arrest is made. In the restaurant racket trials his preliminary work was so solid and organized that after 29 hours of testimony the State was able to rest its case. The remaining 55 days of the trial were employed by the defense in a vain attempt to rebut the evidence he had presented in five days.

One of the chief advantages of this preparation is that Dewey is ready for trial as soon as an arrest is made. Thus, he is enabled to avoid the difficulty of holding material witnesses in custody for an unreasonable length of time. The chief reason for the dizzy speed characterizing his prosecutions is the ruthless pace at which he drives himself and his staff. During one investigation, Dewey himself found it possible to dine at home but once in five weeks. Work, days, nights and Sundays, is the rule. For three months his staff worked every night, and week-end respites were unknown. One of his chief lieutenants worked every night for 10 weeks as late as 2 or 3 a. m., and not once arrived home for dinner.

Swift, Secret, Sweeping In Search for Information.

His raids have all been swift, secret and sweeping. Outside his immediate staff and one or two high police officials, no human being was permitted to know the hour or purpose of these attacks until the moment they were launched. Commanders of squads of plain clothes men received sealed orders, to be opened at a certain corner. Usually this was only a few yards from the place to be stormed. Thus the police officials had virtually no opportunity, if so inclined, to warn their friends among the lawless.

Space does not permit a detailed account of his campaigns, but an idea of the methods used may be gained from the attack through which, on Jan. 13, he smashed one of the principal "banks" of the policy racket with which Harlem and Washington Heights are riddled. Months of preparation were required, for this great gambling swindle is elaborately organized. At the bottom is a group of "runners" who report to agents known as collectors. These in turn report to a small group of men called controllers, who are unknown to the runners. The con-

OBTAINED convictions of James J. Quinlivan, former police officer of vice squad; Enrique Miro, Harlem's policy king, and Patrick Commerford, labor racketeer.

Prosecuted Charles E. Mitchell, New York banker, accused of tax irregularities. Mitchell was acquitted.

Convicted "Waxey" Gordon (Irving Wexler), beer baron of New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, of income tax evasion. Examined thousands of entries in 100 banks and checked 100,000 telephone calls. Proved that Gordon spent in year twice as much on hats as he returned as income. Bootlegger chieftain sentenced to 10 years in prison, fine of $20,000 and $60,000 costs.

As Special Counsel of New York Bar Association.

Served without pay in proceedings for removal of Justice Harold L. Kunstler of Municipal Court. Magistrate resigned in midst of hearing when Dewey proved that in four years he banked $166,660, though salary for period was $44,000.

As Special Assistant District Attorney of New York County.

In one raid seized 22 leading operators in a million-dollar-a-week "shylock" racket. Twenty-one convicted and sentenced to workhouse or Sing Sing, for terms ranging from few months to five years. One escaped through clerical error of date in indictment.

Convicted Louis (Lepke) Buchalter and Jacob (Gurrah Jake) Shapiro, gangsters, who for years had preyed on workers and employes of rabbit fur industry. Each sentenced to two years in prison and fine of $10,000.

To obtain evidence against Charles (Lucky) Luciano, biggest shot in American gangland, staged 41 simultaneous raids on commercial vice haunts. Convicted Luciano and eight aids on 62 counts each of compulsory prostitution. Luciano's sentence 30 to 50 years in prison. His lieutenants, three of whom pleaded guilty, received from two to 25 years.

Obtained indictments of 14 men, including six union officials and two lawyers, on charges of conspiracy in restaurant racket and embezzlement of union funds. One killed himself, one turned State's evidence, one escaped through mistrial, and four are fugitives. Seven were convicted, and will be sentenced Wednesday.

Through simultaneous raids, seized 65 operators of policy racket, and smashed one of Harlem's biggest "banks." Among the captives was one of two owners of "bank" and his lawyer. The second owner fled to Mexico City, where he was apprehended 10 weeks later. Cases not yet tried.

Record to date: 66 indictments, 58 convictions.

'The Man Bilbo' of Mississippi Devises Scheme of His Own for Putting Brakes on Supreme Court

Senator Was Once Jailed for Failure to Obey a Court Order, But the Ten Days Gave Him Ten Years in Office.

By PAUL Y. ANDERSON,
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.
WASHINGTON, April, 3.

AMONG those who feel the time has come to do something about the Federal Judiciary in this country, is Senator Theodore G. Bilbo, a Democrat, of Poplarville, Miss. He is, to borrow his own expressive language, supporting our great President's plan 100 per cent." He has a supplemental plan of his own for curbing the Supreme Court, embodied in a constitutional amendment, but it, alas, already has found its way to an early grave in the vaults of the Senate Judiciary Commitee.

This Senator, who refers to himself in public speeches as "the man Bilbo," feels very deeply about Federal Judges—and who can blame him? One of them sentenced him to 10 days in jail for failure to heed a subpena to testify in a seduction case brought by a Mississippi maiden against the then Governor of that commonwealth.

That was 14 years ago, but the man Bilbo has never forgotten it, or willingly permitted anyone else to do so.

Less han a year ago he harrowed the Senate, more or less, with a description of the anguish he underwent when his little son asked: "Papa, why do other children call you a jailbird?" Although the passage of time and events had not dimmed the memory of his own grief, the picture was somewhat softened for others by the knowledge that the little son had since been graduated from West Point and was now serving his country honorably in an army post at Honolulu, seemingly unscarred by childhood experience.

The face is, that, for every day Bilbo spent in jail (and largely because of them), he has since been able to enjoy a year in public office. But he gives the Judge no credit on that account. That he contrived to turn his brief incarceration into a prolonged and paying period of martyrdom, is, he considers, a matter strictly between himself and the voters of Mississippi.

Gives Up "Raising Hell."

Bilbo, who has served two terms as Governor of a state which does not permit a Governor to succeed himself, came to Washington two years ago, after a campaign in which he promised a delighted electorate to "raise more hell than Huey Long ever thought of." He hasn't raised any worth mentioning. His principal attempt in that line was made last year, in an effort to prevent the elevation to the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Federal Judge who had put him in jail.

Bilbo spoke for more than four hours, re-telling the story of the incident, raising the point of senatorial courtesy in a bid for sympathy, calling the Judge a string of hard names, and promising to prove all manner of charges against him if afforded further time and opportunity. At the conclusion of his performance, when he moved that the nomination be sent back to a committee, the Senate rejected the motion by a vote of 59 to 4, and confirmed the nominee without another roll call.

As one consequence of this debacle, the "vindication" of Bilbo, at which he has worked constantly and profitably since 1923, may be regarded as incomplete, and presumably will still be so when he comes up for re-election in 1940. In the process of such "vindication" as he has accomplished thus far, he has got himself elected Governor and Senator.

Mississippi's martyr statesman is a short, stooping man, with hunched shoulders, stringly hair, thin lips and a humorless smile. His small, pale, blue eyes are a distinguishing feature of his countenance. His platform voice is distinguished by a startling tremolo, and they say when he is going good down home that he can call the screech owls right out of the swamps.

However, that style of oratory has been out of fashion in the Senate since Benjamin Harrison's administration, and the Bilbo tremolo has seldom been raised there since the unflattering outcome of his effort to block the confirmation of Judge Holmes. Vowing vengeance on Senator Pat Harrison, who had opposed him on the Holmes matter, Bilbo campaigned in the senatorial primary last year for ex-Governor Sennett Connor. The wily Pat, who can practice rabble-rousing with the best when his seat is at stake, swamped Connor, and Bilbo returned to Washington still unvindicated.

His Stand on Court Plan.

Among those who are familiar with "the man's" practical turn of mind, and with the realistic eye which he turns upon the perquisites of public office, there never was any doubt about how he would stand on the court proposal. Or if there was, it vanished when Farley officially announced that the issue would be regarded as a test of party loyalty.

However, the constitutional amendment which he introduced a few days ago apparently was his own idea, thrown in as an extra measure of his loyalty. It would provide (1) that the President, after signing an act of Congress, could require the Supreme Court to render, within 60 days, an advisory opinion on the constitutionality of the measure; and (2) that acts thus pronounced unconstitutional by the Supreme Court would become law when re-enacted by a two-thirds majority of each house of Congress.

"My idea," Bilbo told the writer, "is to do away with all this lost motion and delay, and this business of striking down laws after three or four years have passed and millions of dollars is involved. My plan would simplify things."

Convinced It's Sure Cure.

"What are the prospects for its adoption?" he was asked.

"Well, that's hard to say—hard to say. They've got a pot full of 'em in there. But I have devoted a lot of study, research, comparison, analysis and everything else to this subject, and I am convinced that my plan would provide a sure cure for the judicial ills that have beset this democracy through the years."

Those were his exact words—"that have beset this democracy through the years."

"But you are also supporting the President's plan?"

"Oh, 100 per cent! My plan is supplemental. It would be necessary even if we had 25 Justices on the Supreme Court. The trouble with judges is, they change their minds. I don't say the President would be betrayed by the six he would put on, but Old Andy Jackson found out that he couldn't always count on the men he appointed.

"I want to make sure that, when the Supreme Court stands in the way because of its technical construction of the Constitution, the people's interpretation can be made to prevail through their representatives in Congress. The Constitution is a wonderful and a sacred document, but I never thought of judges as saints. When a man has spent his life fighting human rights, you don't

I know that my retirement will make no difference in its cardinal principles; that it will always fight for progress and reform, never tolerate injustice or corruption, always fight demagogues of all parties, never belong to any party, always oppose privileged classes and public plunderers, never lack sympathy with the poor, always remain devoted to the public welfare; never be satisfied with merely printing news; always be drastically independent; never be afraid to attack wrong, whether by predatory plutocracy or predatory poverty.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Louis Nolte, Tested Public Servant.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

I GREATLY liked your appeal to reason in Thursday's Post-Dispatch in behalf of our estimable public servant, Louis Nolte. Every reasonable citizen must feel that he should vote to retain him in office. His record is an open book. His opponents may have all the virtues of all the saints, but—they have not been tried. Mr. Nolte has. We know Nolte.

We have barely got through a cruel period of depression. The masses should well know the hardness of the struggle.

Mr. Nolte has been called a watch-dog. Well, we need a good watch-dog in our city to protect us from the wolves that threaten us on every side, for it is our money that is at stake.

It seems to me this is a question that transcends all party lines. I cannot remember having voted for anyone on the old party tickets since I cast my ballot for Gene Debs in 1908. But I feel I must make an exception and vote for Nolte, one who seems so well to fulfill the poet Pope's line, "An honest man's the noblest work of God," and I might add, if I chose to be cynical, one of the rarest.

Mrs. Lowenhaupt's Candidacy.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

IN the person of Mrs. Haymer Lowenhaupt, the women of St. Louis have a candidate who is excellently qualified to represent them in the Board of Education, and it is highly desirable that they should unite to see that she is elected.

Not only is Mrs. Lowenhaupt well educated and fully aware of the trends of modern education but she is also representative of those who regard the functions of the Board of Education as a civic responsibility of fundamental importance to be faced as a public trust.

She is free to give to the work all the time necessary to serve the best interests of the school children and the public.

MRS. ALEXANDER LANGSDORF.

In Praise of Robert E. Lee.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

A CITIZEN of St. Charles resents the action of the Postoffice Department in issuing the portrait of Robert E. Lee on a postage stamp, declaring this reverence for a rebel "disgusting."

I wonder that anyone could consider reverence for Gen. Lee disgusting. I doubt that any other noted American can bear careful scrutiny of character as well as he.

Lee was a product of Virginia, his forebears were Senators and Governors of Virginia. His father, Light-Horse Harry Lee, had served three terms as Governor. When Virginia was told either to help subdue the South or be invaded, in a day when textbooks taught the right of a state to secede under the Constitution and the primary duty of every man was to his native state, Lee found it impossible to bear arms against his Commonwealth.

For this decision, he suffered scorn and injustice after the war. Must his memory be unjustly treated today?

Americans should be proud of a man whose military prowess ranks with that of Hannibal and Wellington, whose kindness and loyalty are exemplary. We must rise above sectional prejudice, forget antipathies and reverence a great man, wherever found.

LAWRENCE DAVIS.

Job for Public Optimist No. 1.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

IT is no wonder that Justice McReynolds cannot see an exactly rosy future for the country at large. With a chief executive who has let a labor leader get the ax on his neck, with the country only half out of the morass of our greatest depression and with the Jim Farleys and the Tom Pendergasts riding high on the crested wave of the spoils system, it would take Public Optimist No. 1 to see anything very rosy about the future.

Parable of Bub Emmons' Mule.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

OL' BUB EMMONS had him a jack
Down yan side of the Little Black;
Hain't ne'er seed sich a orn'ry fule
As thet thar long-jawed hard-mouth mule.
A bee come lookin', like right bees do;
The jack snatched at him as by he flew.
The bee lit close, an', sidin' by,
The jack stomped at him on the sly.
Up riz the bee, an' up r'ared the jack,
Mouth all teeth an' years laid back.
Down come the bee on the ol' brute's mouth,
An' the jack hightailed fer all pints south
Over the crick, through a bob wire fence;
An' Bub hain't seed him in Ripley sence.

Opposes 2 Per Cent Sales Tax.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

THE 2 per cent sales tax ought to be fought by every housewife and mother. I think, Mabel Horner, that you have voiced the sentiment of thousands in your letter. I am with you for your fight against tax-maniacs.

MRS. COLEMAN.

WHAT IS THIS "FUTILITY"?

(This is No. 9 in our "In Rebuttal" series answering the main arguments which have been put forward for the court reorganization plan.)

It is said that we have reached futility in the effort to deal with our national problems.

What is this "futility" that Mr. Roosevelt and the supporters of his judiciary proposal talk about? Is it indeed true that the will of the people, as expressed by their elected representatives, has been so thwarted by the Supreme Court that a drastic and unprecedented enlargement of the executive power at the expense of the judiciary is the only way to salvation?

The record shows that Congress and Mr. Roosevelt have not been thwarted to anywhere near such an extent as the advocates of his plan would have us believe.

Mr. Roosevelt today, even after the invalidation of the NRA and AAA, has greater powers than have been enjoyed by any other President in peacetime.

In the field of money, he has vast and unprecedented powers. He has devalued the dollar and can devalue it further. He has control over a two-billion-dollar stabilization fund.

Great sums of money are being paid in bounties to the farmers, great sums are at the command of the RFC, great sums are being used for relief.

The Social Security Act is in operation; so also are the acts regulating the stock exchanges and the issuance of securities.

What will be the fate of the Wagner Labor Relations Act cannot be foretold, but the Supreme Court last Monday unanimously upheld a law applying the principles of that act to the railroads.

Futility? How can it be said the court has produced a state of futility when into the broad field of the congressional spending power it has never "thrust its dread sickle" and when it has sustained such laws as those passed upon last Monday—a law for the benefit of railroad workers, a law for the aid of women and children in industry, and a law relaxing the mortgage burden upon farmers?

The futility argument advanced by the President last June in his "No-Man's Land" interview was based in large part on the action of the Supreme Court in invalidating the New York minimum-wage law. Now that the Supreme Court has reversed itself on the minimum-wage question, the argument that the court thwarts the people must rest in very large part on the invalidation of NRA.

NRA was declared unconstitutional by the vote of all nine of the Judges.

Can anybody believe that all nine of the Judges misread the Constitution when they said it did not permit the exercise of such power by the Federal Government as that sought to be exercised under NRA? Can anybody believe that any conscientious court, under the Constitution as now written, would validate the philosophy of NRA?

Recall what the Supreme Court said in the NRA decision:

> If the commerce clause were construed to reach all enterprises and transactions which could be said to have an indirect effect upon interstate commerce, the Federal authority would embrace practically all the activities of the people and the authority of the state over its domestic concerns would exist only by sufferance of the Federal Government.

The court further said:

> It is not the province of the court to consider the economic advantages or disadvantages of such a centralized system. It is sufficient to say that the Federal Constitution does not provide for it.

So said all the court, including Justices Brandeis, Stone and Cardozo.

Can Mr. Roosevelt's plan conceivably, under any circumstances, get him a court with a majority of members (unless they be the veriest puppets) who will read into the Constitution a Federal power over industry which the present court's most advanced exponents of liberal interpretation say is not there?

No; the stumbling block in the way of the President, in so far as the principles of NRA are concerned, is not the court but the Constitution.

ORONOGO'S ORE.

Had the Jasper County mining community kept any one of its earlier names—Leadville Hollow, Center Creek, Minersville—there would be nothing to baffle the researcher. But it adopted the picturesque name of Oronogo along about 1869, and thereby clothed itself in fascinating mystery. There are accounts of its origin, to be sure, but "Introduction to a Survey of Missouri Place-Names," published at the State university in 1934, sternly views them as legends.

One story has it that a meeting to decide on a permanent name for the camp had reached a deadlock when a miner at the rear of the hall shouted, "Boys, it's ore or no go." Another version attributes the remark to a prospector, on being urged by his partner to leave the diggings and attend a circus in a nearby town. He made a rich strike after the ultimatum. Other authorities hold that the name is a modification of "Orinoco," citing other Missouri place-names of Spanish origin.

The ore-or-no-go theory ought to be the popular favorite, for ore still makes the town go. Oronogo got into the news the other day for the fact that the municipal treasury had been enriched by $25,000, with more royalties to come, from rich deposits of ore found under the city cemetery. Ore, by macabre chance, from beneath the resting place of the pioneer miner who gave the town its name and slogan.

THE SCHOOL BOARD ELECTION.

In spite of the emphasis on the campaign for Mayor, Comptroller and Aldermen, voters in Tuesday's election should remember the importance of their choice of five members of the Board of Education.

The persons to be elected will constitute nearly half the membership of the board of 12, charged with grave responsibility in the education of 100,000 children, the employment of more than 3500 teachers and others and the judicious expenditure of more than $10,000,000 of the taxpayers' money annually.

A separate ballot will be handed each voter, listing the School Board candidates. Although 11 of the candidates will be designated with partisan political labels, and the twelfth set down as a non-partisan, the election virtually will be non-partisan, under a last-minute State Supreme Court decision upsetting the 1933 bi-partisan law. Voters may choose any four of the nine various candidates running for full terms and any one of the three who filed as Democrats for an unexpired term.

The Post-Dispatch has published rather full accounts of the careers of the candidates. Regardless of political considerations, which have nothing to do with the operation of the school system, every voter should consider well the qualifications of those for whom he casts his ballot. The public schools are truly a foundation stone of our democracy, and the nation's future trends may depend on the wisdom of their current management. The political spoilsmen are busy making trades for their slates of School Board candidates. Let the independent voters upset their calculations.

STATUS OF THE SIT-DOWN STRIKE.

Whatever one may think about the sit-down strike, it has for the moment at least taken the center of the stage in the Senate from the Supreme Court issue. As the week's debate on the Guffey-Vinson bituminous coal bill came to a fiery close, Senator Robinson, majority leader, agreed to a vote tomorrow or soon thereafter on an amendment which would prohibit sit-down strikes in the soft-coal industry.

The issue was raised when Senator Byrnes of South Carolina, also an administration leader, proposed this as a declaration of public policy. Senators Vandenberg and Johnson, Republicans, supporting Byrnes, called upon President Roosevelt to make known his position on the sit-down technique. Robinson, assisted by Barkley, opposed the amendment vigorously, and in this they had the aid of Senator Borah, who advised against hasty action based on insufficient study of the facts and implications. The constitutional expert from Idaho also questioned the jurisdiction of the Senate in the matter.

What will happen is unpredictable, but a strong possibility is that the bill and the Byrnes proposal will be considered separately, the latter after the vote on the bill. When Robinson was forced to abandon his plan to refer the issue to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce for a proposed national policy to be formulated within 30 days, Senator Neely, handler of the Guffey-Vinson bill in his chamber, declared it would be better to defeat the bill in its entirety than to pass it if "obnoxiously" amended later.

Meanwhile, the House was similarly occupied. The Rules Committee approved a broad investigation of the use of the sit-down strategy, with a vote on the floor forecast for this week.

A new problem is in the nation's hands. There is no question about that.

In the interest of fairness to a point of view, we reprint on this page today the salient parts of an address by James M. Landis, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission and Dean-designate of the Harvard University Law School, at a recent conference of law students in Washington. Attention also may be directed to the remarks of Dean Leon Green of the Northwestern University Law School, visiting professor at Yale this year, who has written about the sit-down strike with calmness, and with sympathy, in the New Republic.

There is also on the record the testimony of Justice Ferdinand Pecora of the New York Supreme Court, who told the Senate Judiciary Committee that "sit-down strikes in defiance of law originated in the lofty seats of high finance before the technique was merely copied by working men and women." In support of this conclusion, he cited the refusal of certain utility holding companies to register under the terms of the Utility Holding Company Act, the indifference to the Wagner Act of many employers and the "sit-down" of investment companies against the Securities and Exchange Act.

While there may be some analogy, obviously what Justice Pecora says in this connection carries the discussion afield; refusal to register under a holding company law and refusal to leave a factory are different in more respects than they are similar. In any case, the use of the sit-down strike by labor, as the Post-Dispatch showed recently, goes back into the last century. To date it after the recent fight of the investment dealers on the Securities Act is to be wrong factually.

That, however, is a minor point. The point is that the sit-down strike today, whatever it may become in the future, is illegal. We are living under today's laws, and a tactic so clearly in defiance of those laws as the sit-down strike cannot continue to be used without provoking, in growing measure, the condemnation of the public.

THAT TAMPA AFFAIR.

At first the guests of that Tampa hotel thought a California earthquake had swept in on Florida. That was not the case at all. What happened was this: two newspaper bruisers, one from New York, the other from Chicago, ganged up on the whole Cardinal team, and for no good purpose. Despite the fearful odds, the Cardinals, back in their Gas House stride, grappled with their assailants with right good will. And when the carnage ended and the moon rose up slowly and calmly looked down on the disheveled palms and battered chairs and splintered panes, what did it see? It saw the New York-Chicago division fleeing across the sands like Mussolini's warriors at Guadalajara, and it saw that the Cardinals had added another victory to their long sequence of two or three triumphs in the lotus-land of grapefruits and lemons.

A noble animal, the Mayor's Big Boy, but is it a horse on St. Louis?

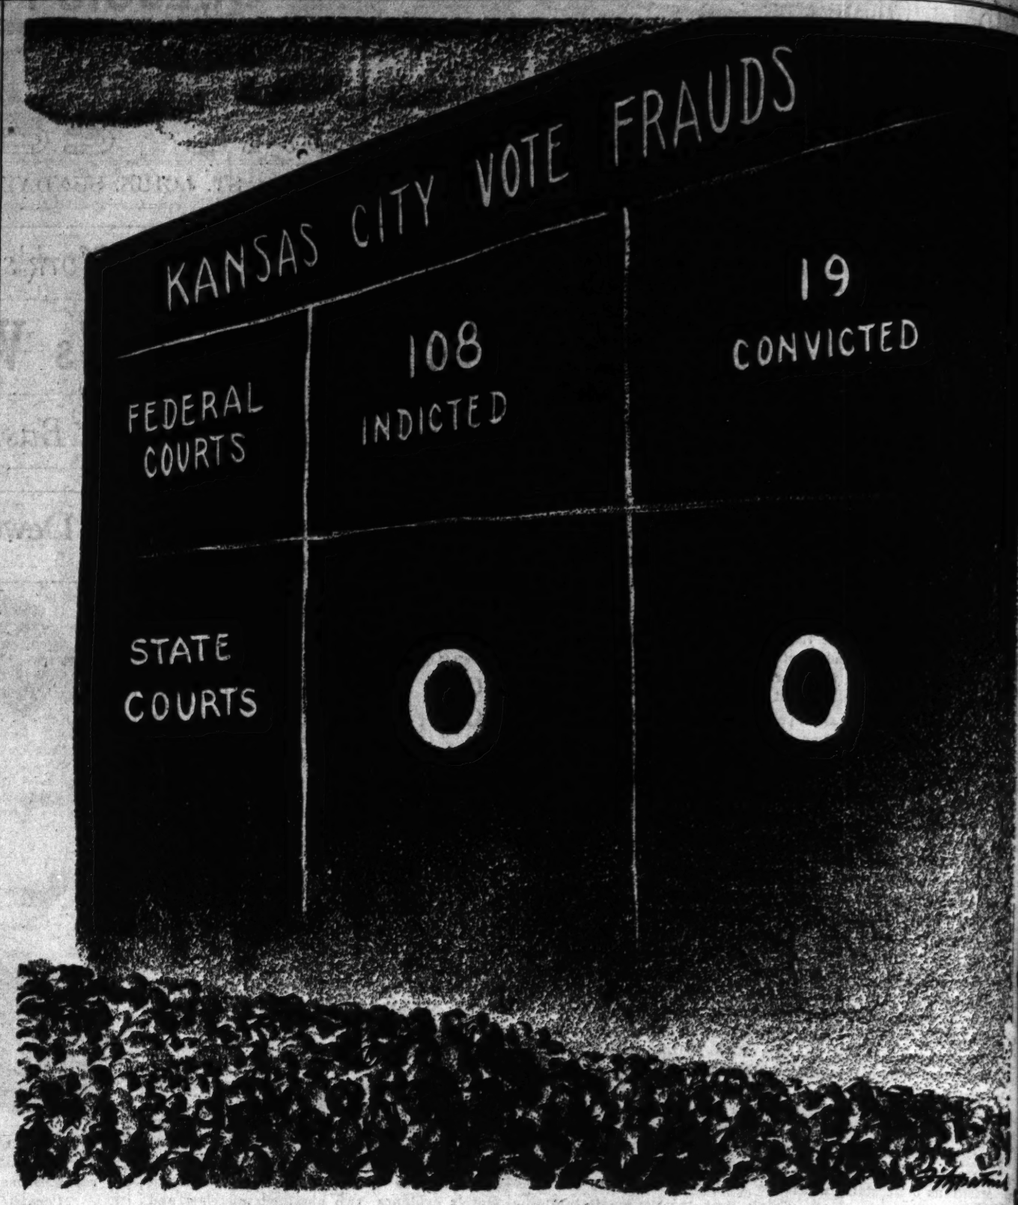
MAINE WILL GO ON FORECASTING.

As a political barometer, Maine may be a complete washout, but the Pine Tree State is going to continue its September "forecasts" just the same. The bill of a State Senator who wanted to combine the early election of State officers and members of Congress with the presidential election in November has been rejected in each branch of the Legislature. It would have meant the saving of about $50,000, but your cagey "down Easter" has more than one way of measuring values.

Let Maine abandon its early election and it would become just one of the 48 states in the electoral college—and one of the unimportant ones at that, because five votes do not cut much of a figure. But so long as Maine voters go to the polls in September, the custom-bound old parties will go on sending high-powered stumpers up and down the rock-bound, isle-set coast for the sake of affecting the outcome and thus influencing—so the theory has it—the national election two months later.

The hoary slogan about Maine and the nation has been debunked repeatedly by Maine itself, but what of that? As long as Maine votes early, the dopesters will keep their eyes on Portland and points north and go over its majorities as if they made a difference. That is more attention than New York gets in September, and Maine isn't going to chuck it.

Mussolini beat a quick retreat along the Herald Tribune front.



MISSOURI WATCHES THE SCORE-BOARD.

A Legal Educator on the Sit-Down Strike

Labor's new technique has "doubtful traditional legal justification," says Dean-designate of Harvard Law School; however, he suggests, a new right for workers' groups may be in the making; insistence on collective bargaining refuses to stand still, in his view, and is working for altered conceptions of industrial relations.

From an Address by James M. Landis, Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, Before Eastern Law Students' Conference, at Washington.

THE needs of the nation today with respect to law may seem to us endless, complex and novel. There can be no doubt of their great number or of their complexity. But I do not believe that, with reference to the springs of their origin, they present anything essentially new.

From decade to decade, our needs with respect to law have varied, but they have varied only in form or in the intensity of demand. They can all be related to the continuing existence of two fundamental desires. The first is the constant clamor of a changing society for the recognition through law of new rights, new claims, new liberties.

The second is a demand for the fashioning of new machinery to give old rights their intended effects—a demand that arises because the complexities of such a society tend to dull the effectiveness of the old machinery to realize the old rights.

Examples of the first desire—for the creation of new rights and new liberties—are to be seen most frequently under conditions of national economic stress, or under conditions where a slow shift of power in society from one group to another occurs. The recognition of this need comes about sometimes dramatically through legislative action, at other times imperceptibly in the course of litigations that offer opportunities for judicial lawmaking.

The history of our law is replete with illustrations of the creation of new rights. In the employer-and-employe relationship, the rights of employes to quit work together for the simple end of improving the conditions of labor found recognition only in the early nineteenth century.

Indeed, the right to strike and through such economic pressure to force collective bargaining found no recognition in this country until the turn of this century, and even today in many states it is still of doubtful standing.

But this insistence upon collective bargaining refuses to stand still. It is pushing itself now from a claim to use economic pressure toward the accomplishment of this end to an insistence that the law itself shall impose a duty upon the employer to endeavor conscientiously to arrange a collective labor contract with his own employes when a majority of them so desire.

We have witnessed for some years the effort of employes to bring recognition of their claim to be free to persuade others to refrain from taking their places, who, by such action, would diminish the effectiveness of their own economic pressure.

In recent months, we have seen the advancement of a new claim to take measures that will effectively prevent all production until grievances are satisfied—action that in its economic effects is the counter-part of the lockout, but because of the absence of any relationship such as the lockout possesses to property, finds itself with doubtful traditional legal justification.

The eventual outcome of such a claim will depend in part upon the emphasis that law will give to the concept of property and its inviolability in its industrial and corporate setting to economic pressure of this type—and in part, perhaps, on the capacity of our law to devise new concepts and mechanisms to meet the needs out of which this type of economic pressure has been born.

A British Elder Statesman

From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

"STAND up to Mussolini," shouted David Lloyd George during a debate on British foreign policy in the House of Commons last week. "Earn some respect for Britain. He is no fool; he knows with whom he is dealing. If he had been dealing with men who spoke in the name of Britain, with the might of Britain behind them, he would not have talked like that."

And later, he pithily added: "I'd rather have Italy's anger than Italy's contempt." That is fighting talk, but this elder statesman is not seeking war and is aware that he can say pretty much what he pleases without adding greatly to the risk of war.

Probably a large part of the Conservative members who support the Baldwin Ministry, which he was attacking, privately agree with his sentiments while damning him for shouting them out in Parliament. But belief in the necessity of peace at any price while the new navy is building seems so general that nothing Lloyd George could say would have much effect.

The position of Lloyd George in British politics is peculiarly British, yet peculiarly personal as well. Before the World War, he was viewed askant by the respectable classes as the mob leader of the Liberal party, the other wing of which was led by such dignified figures as Asquith and Grey. But during the World War, the fiery energy and the nimble brains of the Welsh politician did his country such great service that he retains the status of elder statesman, even though he has no party behind him and speaks for no one but himself.

Yet for the role of elder statesman few men could be less fitted. Japan has retained with profound respect the little group called the genro, of whom but one member survives, at a great age. Japan looks to its elder statesmen for patriotism but also for the calm and ripe sagacity of age and long experience, with no thought of pensioning them off at 70 or at 80.

But David Lloyd George might live to be as old as Methuselah without gaining calm or ripeness. He has always had plenty of sagacity, but his policy is always a brilliant (or not so brilliant) improvisation. After the World War, he did his best to start a new war with a view to driving the Turk out of Europe, but the Conservatives, led by Bonar Law, rejected that wild proposal.

In the present case, it can safely be assumed that Great Britain's lonely elder statesman is not trying to foment war; he is astute enough to know that he can express what others feel about Mussolini without greatly affecting the settled policy of the Government.

Decalogue for Industry

From the Pittsburgh Press.

SO many sermons are being preached to labor these days that one aimed at the pew-holders of the employing class would seem timely and fair.

By way of a text, Zion's Herald, liberal organ of American Methodism, offers the following "Ten Commandments for Industry":

"1. Thou shalt not exploit women and children.

"2. Thou shalt not deny the laborer's right to more than a 'living wage.'

"3. Thou shalt not make a machine of him.

"4. Thou shalt not impair his health and steal his prospects in life by forcing upon him long hours and unhealthful working conditions.

"5. Thou shalt not spy upon him or bear false witness against him.

"6. Thou shalt not suddenly throw him out of work through the 'shut-down' or 'lockout,' and then wash thy hands of all responsibility for him. Neither shalt thou be unmindful of the helplessness of his old age.

"7. Thou shalt not decide critical issues in industry solely from the angle of money-making.

"8. Thou shalt not employ high-priced legal talent to find a way to 'beat the law' whilst thou holdest up thy hands in holy terror over the 'sit-down strike.'

"9. Thou shalt cease looking at labor from the master-slave point of view, and begin to regard industry as a stewardship for the common good.

"10. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself."

A BRITISHER IS FED UP.

Cyril Connolly in New Statesman and Nation, London.

I HEAR from America that the King's abdication has resulted in a general discontent with England, increased by the efforts of our upper class to repay hospitality by selling the coronation to them.

I wonder how many people who read this dread the coronation as much as I do, and feel it to be a great impending black-out of everything pleasant, an orgy of "solemn moments," scaffolding and traffic disorganization.

I feel, too, that the King-making operation, though performed under an anesthetic, is more serious than people suppose. How many of us can still nurse sentimental or romantic feelings about the royal family, to the exclusion of republican logic?

If "God Save the King" were dropped from the cinemas, as a courtesy to foreigners (who do not have to listen to "The Star-spangled Banner" or the "Marseillaise"), would it be so unwelcome?

When one's head is full of Ginger Rogers and one's hands of overcoat, is that really the moment to contemplate the predicament of the sovereign or to request divine intercession to solve it?

THE WORLD GROWS SMALLER.

From the Honolulu Advertiser.

THE world will take another step toward becoming smaller when air-mail service goes into effect April 15 between San Francisco and Hongkong. Immediately, the trans-Pacific line of P A A will be connected with British air mail routes to Singapore, India and Europe, as well as to Australia and the Dutch East Indies. A two-day interval between Manila and Hongkong will be reduced to four or five hours, and the six-day and sometimes eight-day hop by steamer to Singapore will be reduced to a little more than one day. Time marches on with a quicker step when new air-mail services are inaugurated.

ANTI-NAZI DECREE LEADS TO BOYCOTT IN SOUTH AFRICA

German Settlers in Former Reich Colony Flout British Courts, Set Up Own Secret Tribunals.

THEY PLAN PROTEST TO THE LEAGUE

Action Follows Order Barring Political Units in Which Members Pledge Allegiance to Hitler.

By the Associated Press.

PRETORIA, Union of South Africa, April 3.—German settlers in this former German colony of Southwest Africa, angered by a decree outlawing Nazi political units, boycotted courts and prepared a protest to the League of Nations today.

Flouting the authority of territorial judges, they set up their own secret tribunals and began a passive resistance campaign to extend boycotts to other governmental bodies.

The Union of South Africa Government, which administers former German possessions under a mandate, prohibited aliens from joining any political organization or holding any public office without the written consent of the administrator. Any British subject pledging allegiance to any sovereign other than King George VI also will be subject to heavy fine or imprisonment. Britons and aliens engaging in unauthorized political activities would be subject to deportation.

Reaction in Berlin.

In Berlin, official German circles said the Government probably would protest against the decree on grounds it violates promises given to Germans in the former colony granting them full political, cultural and partial commercial equality.

The Union government has carried on a three-year drive to suppress Nazi and other nationalist movements, raiding Nazi headquarters and declaring a Hitler youth movement illegal.

The situation was viewed as "critical" in Capetown, legislative seat of government. Officials were especially displeased by the fact that German youths still were being drafted for German military service just as though Southwest Africa, lost by Germany after the war, was still Reich territory.

"Blacklist" Kept by Nazis.

Nazi organizations, although officially barred, have been known to keep a "blacklist" of Germans fraternizing with Jews or Britons or disobeying party orders. Government officals said Nazis had actually threatened reprisal against "backsliders" when "Southwest Africa is restored to the Reich."

The persistence of Nazi activities already has lost most of South African support for the German demand for return of former colonies.

What connection the Government's decree, aimed at abolishing all political activities by Nazi leaders, might have had with the recent visit here of Vice-Admiral Richard Foerster, former commander-in-chief of the German Baltic fleet, was not disclosed. Foerster insisted his trip was non-political.

Southwest Africa was annexed by Germany in 1884 and surrendered to South African forces in 1915. German influence asserted itself after Adolf Hitler's rise to power in 1933. Subsequently, the German party demanded immediate franchise for German immigrants and the use of German language in the schools.

Spanish Ambassador to U. S.

FERNANDO de los RIOS

Spain's Envoy to U.S Author of Act for Religious Freedom

versity Theater, "La Barraca," directed by the famous poet, Garcia Lorca. He was responsible for the International University of Santander, the opening of 10,500 primary schools in about two years, the installation of 5000 small circulating libraries in the villages and rural sections, and numerous other reforms which can be understood only in the light of Spain's retarded position.

American Ambassador.

He was appointed to the post of American Ambassador because the Loyalist Government felt it was extremely important to have the friendship of the United States. In 1928 de los Rios had taught at Columbia University in New York and he had lectured, more recently, in 1934, at Oxford and Cambridge, as well as having from time to time given lectures at the University of Porto Rico, the University of Havana, and the University of Mexico. It was felt that not only his fluent knowledge of English, but his understanding of English-speaking peoples would be a great asset in Washington.

One is impressed first of all by his courtesy and his dignity. While these are, in a sense, Spanish characteristics, they are combined in Ambassador de los Rios with a kindliness so that his manner is never forbidding. Ardent American friends of the Spanish Government have sought to persuade the Ambassador to take part in various propaganda activities on behalf of Spain. Such requests he has invariably refused, holding scrupulously to his position as the accredited representative of his Government.

Facts as He Has Them.

Within this scope, however, he has sought to acquaint America with certain facts as he has had them from Madrid. Recently he held a press conference in the embassy, receiving representatives of all the leading newspapers, escorting them personally through the many rooms of the handsome house on Sixteenth street, directly across, it happens, from the Italian embassy. The conference was held on one of those recent days when it appeared that the Spanish war was about to involve all the nations of Europe, with Mussolini insisting that Italian troops would remain in Spain, and Russia and France demanding that they be withdrawn. Ambassador de los Rios had that day talked with his Government by telephone and in his study, with the correspondents grouped about him, he discussed latest developments, answering questions that were put to him with his never failing courtesy.

Italians in Fighting Line.

The Ambassador said at that time that official reports from his Government put the number of Italians fighting in Spain at approximately 80,000. He said that documents found in the possession of Italian officers "proved conclusively" that this Italian army had acted "in connection with the Italian Government." Copies of these documents, according to Ambassador de los Rios, have been submitted to the International Committee of Non-Intervention, meeting in London in an effort to localize the war, as well as to the League of Nations at Geneva.

"The last proof submitted by Spain," the Ambassador said, "was a copy of a telegram from Mussolini congratulating the troops of the Guadalajara army for their first advance when the offensive was still unchecked."

"Is it not a fact," the Ambassador was asked, "that Italy is actually at war with Spain?"

"Italy is in fact at war on Spain," he replied. "But there has been no formal declaration of war. There is a war de facto, but not de jure. It is only the prudence of the Spanish Government in this extraordinary situation that has prevented the Spanish conflict from becoming an open international war."

According to the Ambassador, less than 25 per cent of Gen. Franco's army is made up of Spaniards. Nearly 25 per cent are Italians. Another 25 per cent are Moors, among the cruelest and most efficient fighting forces in the world, drafted from North Africa. De los Rios gives these figures in support of his contention that the overwhelming mass of the Spanish people are on the side of the loyalist Government.

Efficiency Demonstrated.

"The Spanish Government is now surer than ever of its victory," the Ambassador said, "not only because of its army's growing efficiency, recently demonstrated, and because of the people's support, but also because of the marvelous civil discipline which has been created between autonomous regions and the central government, between city and country."

Ambassador de los Rios does his share of dining and dining out in the diplomatic tradition. But he feels that, in view of what is happening in his country, he has a more important job to do. He is one of the busiest men in Washington and yet he has found time to visit various cities to explain to American audiences the position of his Government in the civil war that still goes on.

1,600,000 HAVE PARTICIPATED IN C C C WORK IN 4 YEARS

$360,000,000 in Earnings Sent Home; Letter of Greeting From Roosevelt.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, April 3.—Robert Fechner, director of the Civilian Conservation Corps, reported today that in four years more than 1,600,000 young men have participated in the corps' activities.

Besides supporting themselves, they sent $360,000,000 of their earnings home, Fechner said.

"Millions of forest acres have been protected from fire and blight," he said. "Millions of acres of farm lands have been protected against soil erosion ravages. Tens of thousands of miles of roads have been built and well over a billion trees planted."

President Roosevelt sent a letter of greeting to be read in the 2002 camps on Monday, the anniversary of the corps.

"I am sure that the nation is proud of what the Civilian Conservation Corps has accomplished in affording new opportunities to young men and protecting our natural resources," he said. "You men of the Civilian Conservation Corps have helped the nation. In return, you have benefitted physically and spiritually."

W P A CENSUS INDEX PROJECT COMPLETED

12 Car Loads of Records to Be Shipped to Washington—3000 Employed for 18 Months.

Twelve mail car loads of files, cards and original records of the national census of 1900, used in a W P A project in the old Federal Building here, under direction of Census Bureau officials, to provide authentic age records for use by the Social Security Board and other governmental agencies, have been sent to Washington. The project was finished Wednesday and all remaining records will be shipped before April 15.

Information concerning 88,000,000 persons enumerated in the 1900 census was transcribed to 34,000,000 cards by more than 3000 workers, previously untrained for that type of employment, in 18 months' time. The project was called the "largest card indexing job ever attempted," by Gerald Ryan, administrative chief of the Census Bureau, who directed the work.

"It was necessary to set up this supplemental census bureau to provide adequate records after passage of the Social Security Act," he said. "St. Louis was selected because the old Federal Building at Eighth and Olive streets satisfied the requirements and was a government building. St. Louis relief rolls seemed to have the type of people who could do the work."

The second, third and fourth floors of the building were utilized and two shifts were employed, one working from 7 a. m. until 1 p. m. and the other from 1:30 p. m. until 7:30 p. m. In the main the work consisted of taking the bound census volumes and transcribing the information, including names and birth places, to the cards, which later were put into 1600 steel files.

Separate organizations were set up for the three floors, each with a chief and first assistant supervisor, aided by other assistants.

The efficiency of each worker was determined by a statistical department which compiled a daily record of the number of cards written, verified and coded. Also listed were mistakes made and work that had to be done again.

All records were cleared from desks at night, locked in vaults, and taken out again in the morning. Cards of three colors were filled out, pink for institutional census records, white for persons with a family, and tan for persons without family connections.

In addition to the aid provided for the Social Security Board, Ryan believes the index will be useful to persons seeking information for wills, passports, insurance, marriages and divorces.

MICHIGAN ELECTION MAY SHOW SENTIMENT ON COURT PLAN

Balloting Monday Will Be First Anywhere Since November Landslide.

By the Associated Press.

DETROIT, Mich., April 3.—Michigan will elect two State Supreme Court Justices and several other minor state officers on Monday in an election that ordinarily would attract little if any outside interest were it not the first election of opposing party candidates to be held anywhere since last November's Democratic landslide.

Republicans and some Democrats say the reaction of voters to the Roosevelt Supreme Court proposal and conciliatory dealings with sit-down strikers will be reflected in the balloting.

The officers to be filled are: State Superintendent of Public Instruction, State Commissioner of Highways, two seats on the State Supreme Court and memberships of the University of Michigan Board of Regents, the State Board of Agriculture that controls Michigan State College, and the State Board of Education.

MEDICAL SOCIETY MEMBERS TO DISCUSS CAPPER BILL

Meeting April 15 to Consider Effect of Proposed Health Insurance Measure.

Members of medical societies in the St. Louis area will meet April 15, at the St. Louis Medical Society Auditorium, 3839 Lindell boulevard, with members of dental societies and hospital executives and pharmacists, to hear a discussion and explanation of the Capper health insurance bill before Congress.

W. R. Gentry, an attorney, will outline the measure with a view to showing its effect on the private practitioner. Gov. Stark, Missouri Congressmen and State Legislators and representatives of State and American medical associations have been invited to attend.

Gov. Nelson G. Kraschel of Iowa will be the principal speaker at the annual Jefferson day banquet, April 13, at the Elks Club, 3619 Lindell boulevard. Gov. Stark, Mayor Dickmann and other Democratic leaders have been invited.

The dinner is sponsored by the St. Louis Jefferson Club. Lawrence McDaniel will be toastmaster. Thomas J. McLaughlin, deputy city collector, is president of the club.

Gov. Stark to Speak Today.

Gov. Stark will address the Marquette Council, Knights of Columbus, at a breakfast meeting this morning at the York Hotel. The Council will celebrate its thirty-fifth annual communion service today at St. John's Church, Sixteenth and Chestnut streets.

Senator Bilbo Draws Plan For Curbing Supreme Court

transform him into saint by putting a robe on him.

"Being a lawyer, myself, I know how easy it is for a lawyer to become a partisan on behalf of his clients. Why, I never defended a guilty man in my life! Hell, they were all innocent! That's how a lawyer's mind works."

Once Licensed to Preach.

Bilbo was originally cut out, as the turf writers say, to be a Baptist minister, and actually was licensed to preach. However, he had not completed his theological education when he felt the call of the law and public service. His first election was to the State Senate.

That was before the direct election of United States Senators, and it became Bilbo's duty, during his first term in the Legislature, to choose between James K. Vardaman and LeRoy Percy for United States Senator. Vardaman was the idol of the hillbillies, to whom Percy, in an incautious moment, had alluded as "those cattle."

Percy was elected, and it was disclosed that Bilbo had voted for him. Rural maledictions swirled around the young statesman's head until he made a public announcement that he had voted for Percy in order to entreat one Dulaney, a Percy lieutenant, who had given him $645. Bilbo produced that sum in bills, and went before the grand jury.

It never was quite clear why, if genuinely for Vardaman, he had waited until after the election to expose the "corruption" in behalf of Percy. Moreover, in Dulaney's ensuing trial for bribery, which resulted in his acquittal, a Treasury official testified that the bills produced by Bilbo belonged to a series that was issued after the alleged act of bribery.

This disturbing discrepancy was to haunt Bilbo in future campaigns, but he was elected Governor in 1915, serving from 1916 to 1920.

Brick Promise Wore Out.

In the matter of making campaign promises, Bilbo not only exhibited the prodigal generosity which candidates habitually display toward something they don't possess, but he invented new wrinkles for an old practice. Consider, for example, his celebrated scheme under which the State (or so he promised) would buy red clay from the Mississippi farmers and turn it into vitrified bricks for making highways.

"We can wear the bricks on one side for 50 years," he told his audiences. "Then we can turn them over, and wear them on the other side for 50 years more, and then we can stand them up on end and wear them forever."

In subsequent campaigns, when hecklers ventured to ask what had become of the vitrified brick project, he silenced them by shaking a bony finger, and quavering:

"What kind of service do you expect from the State when you elect a bunch of damn fools to the Legislature?"

First "Vindication" Campaign.

However, we are getting ahead of the story. Bilbo's first "vindication" campaign was a sequel to the Dulaney-Percy episode, and in it the voters were asked to elect him Lieutenant-Governor. They did, and that made everything all right, because Vardaman subsequently defeated Percy in the first primary under the direct election of Senators, and became a figure of some note in Washington during the war-time period.

During Bilbo's term as Lieutenant-Governor, another bribery scandal resulted from the efforts of a land promoter to have a new county created, and for the second time Bilbo decided that it was personally incumbent and politically convenient for him to seek "vindication." The outcome was his first election as Governor.

He was succeeded in that office by his friend and follower, Lee Russell, an event which led eventually to Bilbo's third need for "vindication." Before completing his term, Russell was sued for $100,000 by a capitol stenographer, and Bilbo was summoned as a witness. For his failure to appear, Judge Holmes sentenced him to 30 days in jail and a fine of $100, but later reduced the penalty to 10 days.

Lived in Jailer's Quarters.

The jailer moved out, turning his quarters over to the distinguished prisoner, who made such good use of his time that he emerged a full-fledged candidate for Governor, with a platform of 10 planks—one for each day of his confinement. This time he was defeated, his successful opponent being Dr. Henry L. Whitfield, president of the Mississippi College for Women.

For education and educators it was a costly victory. Four years later Bilbo was swept back into the governorship, and he promptly initiated one of the most ferocious "purges" in the history of American pedagogy. As presidents, respectively, of the State University and the Agricultural and Mechanical College, he installed a real estate salesman and the press agent of a local power company, and the ax began to fall. The victims included 112 members of the faculty at A. and M., 70 at the State University and 17 at the College for Women.

Mississippi's scholastic rating, already the lowest this side of the Fiji Islands, dropped out of sight. "The Man" indulged himself in a thin-lipped smile. New troubles, however, were brewing. A succession of scandals involving State institutions broke around his head, and when his second term expired in 1932 he seemed more in need of "vindication" than ever.

Pat Harrison to the Rescue.

Knowledge of this need, and of the method uniformly adopted by Bilbo to meet it, may have prompted Senator Pat Harrison to find a comfortable spot for "The Man" in Washington without delay. Pat's status as a legislative wheelhorse of the New Deal made that easy. Bilbo was installed at a desk in the Department of Agriculture, reading and clipping newspapers. It is the only recorded instance of a man being paid $6000 a year to operate one pair of scissors and two pots of paste.

Interviewed by the Washington reporters, Bilbo described himself as "a trouble shooter" and "idea man." Asked if he had any ideas about agriculture, now that he had abandoned the notion of transforming Mississippi's topsoil into vitrified brick, he replied: "Yes. I got an idea we could take up the whole cotton surplus by selling the women of the United States on the idea of wearing cotton stockings. Why, he might even persuade 'em to wear cotton lingry."

"Lingry?" the reporters asked. "Sure, lingry. You know that stuff they use for underwear." It developed he was talking about lingerie.

"Pastemaster-General."

The major problem which arose to confront "The Man" during his term as "Pastemaster-General" was that of finding a convenient place to park his car. He sent word by his secretary that he wanted a space in the official parking lot. The guard looked at the crowded lot, and observed: "It would take Einstein to figure out a way to get another car in there."

When this was reported to Bilbo, he laid his scissors down, and roared: "All right, tell him to call this Einstein up and have it arranged! Don't they know who I am?"

Clipping and pasting, and parking his car, did not occupy all his energies, however. He had time to think and plan, and Pat Harrison was soon to feel the sting, sharper than a serpent's tooth, of ingratitude. Pat's main purpose in getting Bilbo away from Mississippi was to prevent him from running against elderly Senator Hubert Stephens, whose term expired in 1934. Where Pat erred was in assuming that Bilbo's hunger for "vindication" could be satisfied by a job paying $6000 a year, when there was a prospect of getting one that paid $10,000 and perquisites.

Promised to Out-Huey Huey.

Senator Stephens was quite a hand with the tremolo stop, in his own right, but he didn't have a chance against Bilbo. In addition to promising the voters that he would "out-Huey Huey,' the veteran vindication-seeker emphasized his claim on the affections of the common people by assuring them that he "never went to town except to take a bath."

Bilbo has often claimed kinship with the poets, and his statement about going to town for a bath was put down as poetic license, since "Bilbo's Dream House," the $50,000 residence upon which he had lavished his artistic gifts, is celebrated for the gaudy coloring and variety of its bathroom tiles.

At any rate, Bilbo returned to Washington a duly elected Senator, only to meet with a new disillusionment. Somewhere he had heard about "senatorial courtesy." He had got an impression that this was an unwritten code which bound Senators to vote against the confirmation of any appointee who was "personally obnoxious" to one of their number.

In some instances that is true, but a great deal depends upon the popularity and prestige of the particular Senator to whom the nominee is obnoxious. When invoked by Senator Hiram Johnson, for instance, the rule had been amply sufficient to prevent the confirmation of Judge McCamant of Oregon, who had violated his instructions at the Republican national convention, in 1920, by casting his ballot persistently for Calvin Coolidge for the presidential nomination, when he was pledged to vote for Johnson.

Jailbird Not Jaybird.

But when Bilbo attempted to invoke it against the confirmation of Judge Holmes, he discovered that the cases were altogether different. He discovered, indeed, that he was merely another freshman Senator—and guilty, in this instance, of seeking to interfere with one of Pat Harrison's appointments. Sensing the state of affairs too late, he appealed to the Senate in these words:

"Suppose that Senator Harrison, the man that many of you love and admire, should be standing here today in my position, and that he were asking you to vote against a cold-blooded, reckless, tyrannical Judge, who had put him in jail, and fastened upon his name, and that of his family, the odium of 'jailbird!', what would you do?"

"The odium of what?" whispered a Senator who had just entered the chamber. "Jailbird," a colleague informed him, also in a whisper.

"Excuse me," said the newcomer, "I thought he say 'jaybird.'"

The lesson of this experience—which was that a Senator's importance and his ability to get what he wants, is likely to be in direct ratio to his usefulness to the administration—was not lost on Bilbo. Henceforth he will be "a good soldier." Having waited, off and on, for 30 years, "vindication" can wait a little longer. The campaign of 1940 is only three years off. And after that there will still remain the Judgment day.

SENATOR BILBO

COUNCILS TO TAKE UP COUNTY ROAD DISPUTE

Ladue and Richmond Heights to Consider Official Stand on Route 40.

City councils of Ladue and Richmond Heights will take up this week the question of adopting an official stand on the route to be chosen by the State Highway Commission for the new location of United States highway No. 40, between North and South and Warson roads.

A public hearing will be held by the commission at Jefferson City at 3 p. m., April 12, for its guidance in picking the new route. The Richmond Heights council will meet tomorrow night and the Ladue council possibly at the same time.

Two hundred residents of Ladue, at a town meeting at Price School Friday night, heard vigorous protests against a contemplated route paralleling Clayton road on the south and seemed generally to favor instead the use of Clayton road itself.

Mayor Brainerd W. La Tourette of Richmond Heights said to a Post-Dispatch reporter yesterday that he probably would represent his city at the commission hearing, but that no official action had been taken by the council on the highway.

"I think the new southern route would be highly undesirable," he said. "It would cut through some fine subdivision property and destroy its usefulness for subdivision development. I think the most practical route is Clayton road, widening it if necessary. The highway would have to reach Clayton road ultimately, at or near North and South road, so I don't see why it should be taken from Clayton road at all."

Lay road is the boundary between Richmond Heights and Ladue, the latter city having been formed late last year by a merger of the old residential villages of Ladue, McKnight and Deer Creek.

The State has proposed to reroute No. 40, the Atlantic City-San Francisco highway, by way of the new express highway in St. Louis; Clayton road, between Skinker boulevard and North and South road; a route to be selected between North and South and Warson roads, and a new location from Warson road to Wentzville, St. Charles County, nearly all of which has been completed or placed under construction.

Protests at the Ladue town meeting were directed chiefly against the injurious effect it was feared a busy through highway would have on the residential countryside, where many homes are surrounded by large grounds. On the other hand, it was argued that the character of Clayton road was steadily changing to commercial, and that this artery was well suited for development as a principal thoroughfare.

Sentiment at the gathering was preponderantly, although not unanimously, in favor of the Clayton road route and against the south route.

PRIMARY IN MEXICO TODAY, 'ORGANIZED WOMEN' TO VOTE

First Time They Have Taken Part on Large Scale; 2000 Candidates in Congressional Races.

By the Associated Press.

MEXICO, D. F., April 3.—Mexico's voters, including thousands of women who will cast ballots for the first time, tonight studied last-minute appeals of nearly 2000 candidates for 173 congressional seats in tomorrow's primaries.

Troops were held in barracks upon orders of the War Department to quell any disorders. The Senate sent election commissioners to 27 states to see that the balloting is conducted fairly.

The primaries of the National Revolutionary (Government) party will mark the first time that "organized women," members of labor syndicates, peasant unions and agrarian leagues, have voted on a nation-wide scale.

Although they contend the Mexican Constitution does not bar them from voting, they will not be permitted to cast ballots in the general congressional elections in July.

Despite the prohibition, two women, Senora Maria del Refugio Garcia and Senorita Soledad Orozco, will be independent candidates for congressional seats at the July election.

MORE OF "THE GOLDEN BOUGH"

AFTERMATH. A Supplement to The Golden Bough. By Sir James George Frazer. (The Macmillan Company, New York.)

IN "Totemism" (1887) Sir James Frazer began his comparative study of the beliefs and institutions of mankind; and in 1890 appeared the first volume of "The Golden Bough," one of the most impressive contributions to the literature of folkways in the history of ethnographical research.

He began it with a treatise on the ancient rule of the priesthood or sacred kingship of the grove of Nemi or Aricia near Rome, by which a candidate for the priesthood could obtain the office only by slaying the priest, and held it until he was himself slain. The grove, devoted to the worship of Diana Nemorensis, sheltered, according to legend, a tree off which no bough might be broken, save by a runaway slave. If he succeeded, he might fight the priest, and if he slew him, take over his office. The "Golden Bough" which Aeneas broke off at the Sybil's command before venturing to the nether world (Virgil, Aeneid, vi, 136) was believed to be a branch of this tree. Frazer's explanation of the priest of Aricia as an embodiment of the tree spirit, slain in his character of incarnate deity, led to the discussion of a vast number of other primitive customs and superstitions, contained in the successive volumes of this monumental work.

The present volume brings extension and approximate completion to what Frazer says he cannot but regard as "a dark, a tragic chronicle of human error and folly, of fruitless endeavor, wasted time, and blighted hopes." He presents new evidence which confirms and makes all the more remarkable some of the hypotheses of the earlier work. His chapters illuminate such subjects as the magical control of the weather; magicians as kings; the worship of trees; tabooed acts, persons, things, words; the influences of the sexes on vegetation; reincarnation of the dead; were-wolves; swinging as a magical rite. The savage's naive reverence for his shadow; the grisly importance of human sacrifice in the longevity of things built by man; the susceptibility of the soul to ravishment by illness or ill wind; the grim rigors of head-hunting ritual; the gaieties of May day and the mock ferocity of the hobby horse; these and other matters form the background of a remarkable panorama of the life of primitive man the world over, groping myopically through the mists of ignorance and superstition toward goodness and truth.

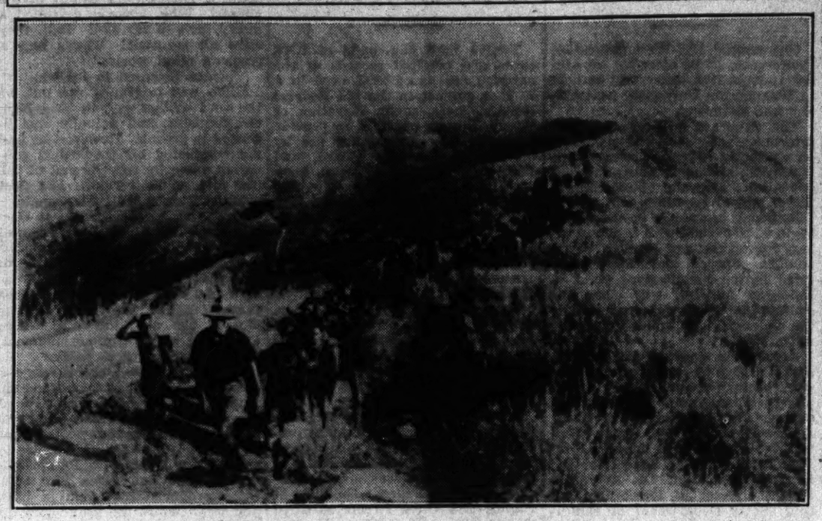
MICHAEL LEAHY'S PARTY IN NEW GUINEA



Detailed Picture On Broad Canvas

ALL GOOD AMERICANS. By Jerome Bahr. (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.)

THE notion that the Middle West is somehow more essentially American than any other section of the country, and that it is therefore destined to become the cradle of a truly indigenous American culture, is constantly achieving a wider currency, particularly in the Middle West. However dubiously the citizens of the patronizing East or of the awakening South may look upon such a proposition, it does have the merit of directing the attention of creative artists in the upper Mississippi basin toward the vast wealth under their eyes.

All but two of the stories in this book deal with the people of a small Middle Western town. And after one has forgotten the identities of the people described, the picture of the town itself remains, with its race conflicts and religious bigotry, its numerous sordid little tragedies, its gossip and its narrowness, its inability to build spiritual foundations that will stand firm through social catastrophe, its bewilderment at the inexplicable collapse of economic security, its pathetic eagerness to accept the New Life offered by any New Deal.

The collection is very rich in incident, and the author makes casual references in one story to happenings that would provide the stuff of a dozen more. But this richness of material cannot disguise a poverty of insight. Bahr writes well enough; his constructions are impeccable, his phrases are frequently well-turned; he is never trite or sentimental or sophomoric. But the flash of vision, the telling word, the ultimate power that gives a work of art emotional depth and impact, is missing. The reader who would be deeply stirred by these stories must carry them on himself past the point at which the author leaves them. The book is a fine job of reporting, a detailed picture on a huge canvas, a valuable social document; but it is not artistic creation in the true sense.

Intellect at Strife With the Heart

SON OF HAN. By Richard LaPiere. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

THE study of the house in the Street of Happy Memories was sheltered; but the noises of the street outside could not be excluded. Three generations worked in that study. Three times a member of the family Han reached the rank of a "Scholar of the First Order." And three times the noises of the street and of the rest of the household, the demands of living, broke into the secluded study and arrested scholarship.

And not, one infers, three times only. "Son of Han" is the story of Han Te-Lin and his own personal tragedy of frustration. But the distinctive quality of the book is in the feeling of continuity which it conveys to the reader, its emphasis on "family." It constantly suggests that no one of these characters is in himself of very great importance: what is important is the force that works through them, a force that is greater than they.

The masculine members of the family Han, each in his turn, discover that the abstract intellect is "powerless to cure a baffled heart." Yet each continues to fight against —not Fate—but the compelling force within himself. Each inevitably loses the fight, and each transfers his ambitions to his son. The defeat, however, is not really failure. The old matriarch from the first desires only sons, descendants to perpetuate the family; she has no patience with this futile, childish playing with words and ideas. And she is wiser than her sons.

Although the tale is of the Chinese, the scene laid in China before the advent of Western "civilization," it is essentially a story of Man. And it is significant that the book begins and ends with the birth of a child, a new "Son of Han," to take up again the old one-sided conflict between scholarship and life, between the intellect and the heart, between the quiet study and the importunate sounds of the world from the Street of Happy Memories.

Hilarious Tale Of a Hoyden

GREEN GRAVEL. By Dora Aydelotte. (D. Appleton-Century Co., New York.)

IT IS A rare joy to come upon such a plain, hilarious story as Dora Aydelotte has written for girls. "Green Gravel" concerns the more or less hectic adventures of Judy Clement, the second of three daughters of a plain "folksy" family living in a Middle Western farming community. This young hoyden is a cross between Tom Sawyer and Peck's Bad Boy. A born leader with a highly developed imagination, she keeps the townspeople in constant apprehension of what she will do next. From the antics of her pet goat, a source of never-ending embarrassment to her family, and especially to her 14-year-old sister, for whose grownup airs and youthful swains Judy has the utmost contempt, to her all-night escapade in the woods during a storm and her brief acquaintance with a skunk; from her inadvertently locking another little girl in the town jail to her falling through the ice while skating; not to mention many other adventures, such as "dressing up" and "playing show," Judy's life is one continual round of fun and excitement.

By One Who Knows His Native Texas

BANNER AT DAYBREAK. By Edwin Lanham. (Longmans, Green & Co., New York.)

CLAY HALL, a young art student in France, was one of the rich Americans who, in prosperous days, made the name American synonymous with eccentricity. He studied art waywardly, drowning his moods in cognac, or relieving them with "femmes de nuit." On a trip to the Riviera he met Hilda James, also an American, studying design. Later in Paris he and Hilda were married. In a city on the verge of revolution, after the Stavisky scandal, they found themselves aliens. They had created for themselves an artificial world, and it had collapsed under their feet.

Most of their money gone, they sail for America and, after an episode in New York, Clay returns with Hilda to his home town in Texas, which he had left in order to escape the domination of his grandfather, Amon Hall. This is the author's native country, and he describes it from all his senses, hearing the cries of quail and crow, seeing the prairie stretch green to the sunset or dusty in the drouth. Old Amon, fast losing his fortune, makes Clay the servant of his desperate effort to forestall catastrophe. But drouth burns up the pastures, starving his herds. A fire that destroys his old home leads to the death of his daughter, Olivia. Hilda, a stranger to the town and its ways, alone has the courage to break the old man's hold on Clay.

Even with many incidents that appear irrelevant, "Banner at Daybreak" follows a course. With less spread of background, Mr. Lanham could perhaps have made more vivid the conflict between Amon Hall and the people of the generation coming after him, Olivia, Clay, Hilda. For Mr. Lanham, cleverly as he writes about Americans in France, makes far more human than these the group at home: Amon, at 85, riding after his herds; the men of the ranch, dehorning cattle or going to church; Olivia and the darkies who are her servants. He is at home as a novelist with sage and mesquite, pecan trees and sycamores; and his "cry of bullfrogs in the creek" will remain with the reader longer than the clink of his champagne glasses.

BACK INTO THE STONE AGE

THE LAND THAT TIME FORGOT. By Michael J. Leahy. (Funk & Wagnalls, New York.)

ALTHOUGH superlatives are distressingly common in our contemporary drum-and-fife criticism, it is seldom possible to say with certainty that any book is the most important of the season in a given field. So much is a matter of opinion, of the mimetic propensity in human nature, and the subtle tyranny of cults and cliques. But surely "The Land That Time Forgot" should rank as the outstanding travel book of this year, for the reason that it reveals to the world a land of great extent hitherto unknown to white men—a fertile country with a population of more than a quarter of a million still living in the Stone Age.

When, in 1926, gold was discovered on Edie Creek in southeastern New Guinea, Michael J. Leahy, then living in Queensland, Australia, joined the rush. He succeeded in securing a claim after many hardships, but an attack of fever compelled him to leave the country. This initial frustration only set him dreaming of richer creeks farther inland where no white man had ever been. Yonder in the vast white space, marked "probably uninhabited" on the maps, what Klondikes were waiting to be claimed!

Finally, in 1933, after various preparatory experiences in the coastal areas, Leahy, his young brother, Dan, and another white man, with a number of natives set out on the great adventure and walked right through the unknown country! They found gold, but that was only incidental, as the author himself came to realize, for quite evidently he and his brother are born adventurers. They put large rivers and mountains on the map, and two peaks, with altitudes around 15,000 feet, are now named after them. But their greatest discovery was a thickly populated valley, 60 miles long and 20 broad, hemmed in by lofty ranges. The natives of that earthly paradise had never before seen a white man. Leahy and his white companions were regarded as gods from the world of spirit, and certain of his black servant boys from the coast were "recognized" by women as their dead sons returned. All their instruments were made of stone. Shells were their money. Their gardens were beautifully landscaped, their houses, some rather elaborate, were built in trees, and their bridges were cleverly constructed on cantilever and suspension principles.

It was said above that the Leahys "walked right through" the vast white space on the map. But the going was far from easy, especially before they came out into the valley. Often the mountainous country, full of tangled brush and vines, seemed almost impossible to penetrate, and twice they were forced to fight crowds of natives armed with spears, bows and stone axes. Why the Leahys were not better armed the reader does not learn. They carried two shot guns, two .22-caliber rifles, a .32 rifle and a small caliber pistol or two! But they managed—once by a terrifyingly narrow margin.

In 1934 the country was further explored with the aid of airplanes. Whether or not Leahy himself wrote the present account—and there is some excellent writing in it incidentally—one feels his personality throughout. No playing to the gallery here—only an honest-to-goodness man, with more than the normal endowment of courage, following the lure of the unknown, and, in spite of the high price paid in suffering, having the time of his life!

So here indeed is a book worth printing.

One Cannot Run Away From Self

AWAY FROM IT ALL. By Cedric Belfrage. (Simon & Schuster, New York.)

FOR Mr. Belfrage, an English journalist, the imperial, capitalist society of the present day is an unrelievedly depressing spectacle. Most aspects of latter-day civilization (with the possible exception of scientific techniques) such as religion, philanthropy, politics, entertainment and patriotism he classifies in a lump as the masses' opiates. "Away From It All" purports to be an account of the author's trial of the various pain-killers offered by society to help men forget unpleasant reality.

Mr. Belfrage recounts briefly his career at an English public school, where he was exposed to the Panglossian view of this best of all possible worlds. For him the conservative dogma of history and economics had no more bearing on the realities of experience than the tinselled productions of Hollywood, where he hacked out scenarios for some years.

The bulk of the account of the author's personal adventure in escapology (the word is Mr. Belfrage's) is concerned with a trip around the world. The author puts to the test the thesis that the best way to escape appalling reality is to keep on the move. Nowhere, however, is he able to get away from what to him is the blight of profit economy. Finally, returning to England via America at the end of a year, he is convinced (partly by Sinclair's EPIC failure in California) that there is no escape from truth, that the only way out is to face reality, act in accordance with his deep convictions, and become a militant radical.

A good word for the book is breezy. The prose is journalism at its best. Humor, irony and prejudice on every subject, from burlesque to foreign missions, make lively reading. The book is completely irreverent, often shallow. It is, however, revealing personal history and travel narrative of a remarkably high grade.

Intimate Letters Of the Late AE

AE'S LETTERS TO MINANLABAIN. With an Introduction by Lucy Kingsley Porter. (The Macmillan Company, New York.)

THESE letters by the Irish poet to his American friends, the Kingsley Porters, combine his philosophy and his poetry in delightful informality. Here, in a style both poetic and conversational, we find much astute comment on the current scene, some of the most whimsical of modern fantasy, and many profound insights into the nature of man and the universe.

His comment on modern economic problems cuts clear and deep. Nowhere does he see an immediate solution. In Russia there is not enough kindness, he feels, and "kindness is the power which unites things otherwise incompatible." In America at the present time he believes there is too much idolization or hatred of Roosevelt, who, as he sees it, is not so much a leader as a representative of certain rising forces in the national life. The President must keep in tempo with these tides or be drowned. The solution lies deeper than these personal or social issues, with the very essence of the nature of man and that of the cosmos.

For this reason he observes: "I believe the only news of any interest does not come from the great cities or from councils of state, but from some lonely watcher on the hills who has had a momentary glimpse of infinitude and felt the universe rushing at him."

To the lovers of this wise and charming Celt perhaps these letters will give, even more than his profound and lovely poetry and prose works, a quickening sense of continued companionship with one whose earthly career is ended.

Says Japan Is Putting Up Bluff

JAPAN'S FEET OF CLAY. By Freda Utley. (W. W. Norton & Co., New York.)

IT may be taken for granted that Japan's vigilant censor will bar this book the instant it comes to his attention. He need read no more than the first sentence to appraise its dangerous character: "Japan is putting up a big bluff to the world." That is the thesis, and the writer undertakes in thorough fashion to expose the bluff.

The exposure takes in many popular conceptions of Japan, from the traditional courtesy of its people to the nation's generally respected military might. Both, Dr. Utley says, are hollow shams, as are Japan's vaunted industrial efficiency, its economic system, even the people's veneration for the Emperor. The country is poor in natural resources, dependent for both its needs and its profits on foreign markets. Its masses are ground by poverty and seething with discontent.

Japan has been called the "Britain of Asia." In reality, says this writer, a closer comparison is with Czarist Russia. There are the same half-starved peasants, wealthy overlords, dominant military caste, brutal Government, lack of civil rights. And no less than in Old Russia, "an explosion sooner or later is inevitable."

War, Dr. Utley thinks, would mean catastrophe for Japan. But so powerful has become the illusion of military invincibility that the other Powers have considered it judicious to let Japanese aggression go on unchecked, thus permitting accumulation of resources that will in time make good the bluff. This, in the writer's view, is short-sighted folly. A boycott of only a few weeks would bring Japan to terms, she says, so close is the nation always to the border-line of starvation and exhaustion of materials.

Elaborate analyses and numerous tables back up every phase that is subject to statistical treatment. The writer is doubtless well qualified, having been on the staff of the London School of Economics and having spent two years in Japan. Only an expert of similar background could undertake to gainsay her findings, but the objective reader will feel that she proves too much, that her indignant style, apart from the analytical passages, betokens a not unprejudiced point of view.

He Could Not Find The Middle Way

YOUNG ROBERT. By George Albee. (Reynal and Hitchcock, Inc., New York.)

BUT for its structural ineffectuality, "Young Robert" might be a masterly work. Its characters are vivid, its story worth the telling, its language precise. Alas, then, for its endless recapitulations, its dull and irrelevant interspersions. As if he were unable to face the too bright flame he has kindled in "Young Robert," Mr. Albee proceeds by side and backward glance, occasionally resting himself by subsidence into his own personality.

The San Francisco Limewrights do, indeed, make a blinding light. As strong as the Greek gods, as unconsciously heroic and as whimsical in their respect for humanity, they stalk about performing deeds of epic turpitude. They are ever faithful to the precedent set them by their father, Bountiful Harvest Limewright, who pioneered in California before the Gold Rush and seeing Leda, shot her Irish lord of a husband and carried her off. These are their offspring: Dermott, the rancher who could fell a bull with his fist; Conor, who gives his life for a stableful of horses; Flann, faithless winner of medals for bravery; Dana, gayest of the rogues, a fake preacher who dynamites a city hall; several queer daughters and Angus, snarling laboragitator and father of young Robert. Robert is heir to their vigor and prideful coarseness, imbued with their tradition of rebellion, but endowed besides with contemplation. He veers always between thought and action, unable to find himself in either or to discover the middle way.

The story of Young Robert is told by Avery Gibson, a sensitive son of a conventional merchant, who discovers Robert in grammar school and worships him forever thereafter. The child's viewpoint, maintained through more than half the book, is exquisitely accurate, reducing even such horror as the San Francisco earthquake to a boy's adventure. The portrait of San Francisco itself is magnificent, and descriptions of the coast and of Dermott's ranch attain to poetry.

The events of Robert's life do not form a true plot, having no climax and an insignificant end, but they serve to show forth clearly and credibly a Shelley without faith, born of the people, who translates beauty into words but rebellion into deeds.

NEW VOLUME ON MARLBOROUGH

THE YEARS OF MASTERY, 1705-1708. Volume V of Marlborough, His Life and Times. By the Right Hon. Winston S. Churchill. (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.)

FOR THOSE who have been following Winston Churchill's monumental account of his ancestor, John Churchill, first Duke of Marlborough, who in his day was the first soldier and statesman of all Europe, little can be said about Volume V that has not been said before, for Volume V is more of the same—distinguished prose, comprehensive setting, documented detail, concise exposition and vivid narrative, all blended into an heroic whole. It dates from before Ramillies to after Oudenarde when Marlborough was at the peak of his powers.

In the field he was unbeatable, but at home his beloved wife, Sarah, was falling out with Queen Anne—Sarah took her Whig politics most seriously; Anne liked the Tories better, although, being a Stuart, she would have preferred to rule without account of either. The Lord Treasurer, Godolphin, Marlborough's friend, was in precarious balance in Cabinet and Commons. To support him Marlborough often had to give the Queen advice she did not want and would not take—she chose to listen to Harley. Thus Marlborough had not only to cope with the might of France in the persons of Villeroy and Vendome, but also with as fine a mess of politics and intrigue as ever plagued a man. That his course was wise and right is beside the point; its righteousness ruined him with the Queen.

Such is the gist of Volume V, a continuation of Churchill's attempt to restore the great Duke to his greatness. Few have fared worse in history than Marlborough. Dean Swift was vicious, Thackeray later had his fling, and it was Marlborough's misfortune that very little that he accomplished had lasting effect enough to give the lie to defamers. The War of the Spanish Succession, which kept him so long afield, is scarcely a footnote in memory; his brilliant feats of arms were erased into ultimate inconsequence. Dozens of smaller men have wrought less and loomed larger down the years.

The chronicle is at its best in the battle sequences. The chapters on Ramillies and Oudenarde are as fine of their kind as any that come to mind, clear enough for the layman, detailed enough for the study of the expert.

Churchill had intended to conclude his work with this book, but balance and proportion, in view of the available material, forbade a conclusion so soon. Volume VI is still to come.

Another Remarkable Long Novel

THE OLD BUNCH. By Meyer Levin. (The Viking Press, New York.)

ANOTHER contribution to the growing number of long novels is here presented by Meyer Levin, a Chicago magazine editor, who in 964 pages gives a realistic account of the lives of a dozen Jewish young people during the time between 1921 and 1934.

Like James Farrell's "Studs Lonigan," "The Old Bunch" has Chicago as its locale, the middle class as its people; but here all similarity ceases. Farrell drew his picture from one family and presented life in its more sordid aspects. Levin deals with an entire neighborhood and many phases of life.

"The Old Bunch" is first encountered when the group graduates from high school. Filled with youthful exuberance, they have already found their place in the "jazz age." Heretofore, their lives had been pretty much the same, but now their individualities emerge. Rudy and Mitch study medicine, become good doctors; Lou marries the daughter of a Jewish politician; Alvin wants to be a rabbi, but the depression forces him into his father's chair factory; Joe, secretly ashamed because his father runs a cheap lodging house, wants to be a sculptor and becomes a poorly paid part-time commercial artist. Some of the boys study law, including Runt Plotkin, who is successively a cab driver and a shyster. Others cheerfully enter their fathers' businesses and become successful.

The girls of "The Old Bunch" seem, as a rule, to have done better than the boys, finding satisfaction in being good wives and seemingly unconcerned with problems of race and money making.

As a cross-section of life, "The Old Bunch" is a superlatively fine job, but the multiplicity of characters and the looseness of design leave some doubt of its real value as a novel.

The First Part Of a Tetralogy

THE EAST WIND. By Compton Mackenzie. (Dodd, Mead & Company, New York.)

THIS is the first volume of a tetralogy which Mr. Mackenzie plans, dealing with the development of young John Ogilvie—a precocious product of English public school life—during the first 25 years of the twentieth century, and with the author's own impressions of the changing problems and relationships in post-Victorian England down to the present.

"The East Wind" promises much for the success of what seems a tremendous undertaking. Although a full-length novel in itself, it covers only two adolescent years in the life of John Ogilvie, the first two years of the century, when John is making the transition from public school to university. Yet it depicts so skillfully the psychology of this boy and his emotional reactions that many readers will look forward with impatience to following John Ogilvie through the years of the Great War and the tumultuous post-war years in the subsequent volumes.

The story itself does not lack faults. John and his two Jewish friends are almost insufferably precocious at times, and their lengthy, brilliant conversations are hard to accept from 17-year-old minds, however unusual. It is difficult, also, to accept the love affair between John and Miriam Stern, a woman 20 years his senior and the mother of his best friends, Emil and Julius. On the other hand, the very brief love affair with 18-year-old Rose is exquisitely done. It has in it all the wonder of the new, unimagined delight of adolescent love.

In these days of hurried, staccato writing, the author's smooth, unhurried prose is outstanding.

How the Frontier Moved West

THE WEST IN AMERICAN HISTORY. By Dan Elbert Clark. (Thomas Y. Crowell Company, New York.)

THERE was a time in American history when "the West" meant everything lying beyond the eastern foothills of the Appalachian chain. The only break in this barrier was the Valley of the Mohawk, which led in the direction of the Great Lakes region, and was stoutly guarded by the unfriendly Iroquois.

Dr. Clark tells the absorbing story of how the Western frontier gradually crept beyond the Appalachian foothills, up and over the mountains into the coveted, fertile valleys of the Middle West, crossed the Mississippi and swept impulsively over the Great Plains, through the passes of the Rockies, and on to the shores of the Pacific.

There are several chapters dealing with the explorations of the French and Spanish adventurers who ranged widely in the vast trans-Mississippi area many years before any one from the settlements along the Atlantic looked down from the crest of the Appalachian highland.

The author makes provocative mention of certain hardy, unsung men in buckskin who formed the van of westward expansion—the traders and trappers who kept no records and whose achievements have come to us chiefly through the fragmentary reminiscences of old timers and traditions lingering in the minds of men whose ancestors heard the vivid tales of these trail-breakers.

The days of dim forest trails, of the pony travois and pack train, of the pony express, the prairie schooner, the stage coach, flatboat, steamboat and railroad are all woven into the pattern of this authoritative summary of young, westering America.

Dr. Clark's work was designed as basic reading in advanced courses in the history of Western America. Its genuine readability makes it also of great interest to the general reader. Altogether this work of nearly 700 pages is no small achievement. Because its author has availed himself of the latest researches in frontier history and given his subject modern treatment, it seems destined to fill its intended place and thus supersede certain earlier works in the same field. There is an excellent, suggestive bibliography and the index is adequate.

Some of the Very Latest Sleuthing

A CASE FOR THREE DETECTIVES. By Leo Bruce. (Frederick A. Stokes Co., New York.)

THE BONFIRE MURDER. By T. Arthur Plummer. (The Macaulay Co., New York.)

ON THE NIGHT OF THE 18TH. By Laurence W. Meynell. (Harper & Bros., New York.)

SILENT TERROR. By T. C. H. Jacobs. (The Macaulay Co., New York.)

DEATH STOPS THE REHEARSAL. By Richard M. Baker. (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.)

THE AFFAIR OF THE SCARLET CRAB. By Clifford Knight. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

HARNESS BULL. By Leslie T. White. (Harcourt, Brace & Co., New York.)

"A CASE For Three Detectives" is a clever tour de force. Mrs. Thurston, a nice, amiable but somewhat stupid woman, is found in a closed room with her throat cut from ear to ear. Three detectives materialize out of nowhere. One is a little Continental expostulating in French phrases, another is a priest who discusses the mysteries of life and death, and the other is a tall lean Englishman, complete with valet, painfully correct and all that sort of thing. Obviously the author is having a little fun with three famous fictional detectives. The separate lines of research and conclusions are described with gentle satire. The story is entertaining even though the actual counterparts of M. Amer Picon, Father Smith, and Lord Simon Plimsoll are not familiar.

It is a pleasure to observe that the United States has no corner on corrupt municipal politics. "The Bonfire Murder" shows that even England has trouble with aldermen and shady contracts. A corpse in a bonfire, a Mayor or his twin brother, skullduggery in high places, provide an interesting situation, fraught with possibilities—unfortunately, almost all missed by the author.

"On the Night of the 18th" is a nice bit of English local color, distinctly upper class-conscious. The death of a lascivious old miser provides the reader with an embarrassment of motives and an eccentric Scotland Yard investigator.

"Silent Terror," an adventure novel of a super-criminal, combines counterfeiting, drug traffic, and white slavery. Something happens on every page, but not of sufficient interest to save the reader from boredom.

"Death Stops the Rehearsal" doesn't measure up to the same author's "Death Stops the Manuscript." The sinister something or other that is supposed to brood over the story turns out to be rather silly after all.

The Red Badge $2000 prize mystery, "The Affair of the Scarlet Crab" deals with a scientific excursion to the Galapagos, some nice people, a couple of scientists, a luxurious yacht, and a list of clues in the back of the book. Not bad, but the deus ex machina is inadequately disguised as a scarlet crab.

"Harness Bull" is not actually a detective story but a description of a day and a night and another day in the life of a chief detective on a metropolitan police force. The realism may disturb some readers but the story will hold most. In spite of stiff writing in the beginning the tale rises to a powerful commentary on modern urban life.

3 PER CENT YIELD CHECKS DECLINE IN U. S. BONDS

Mounting Offerings During Week Drive Federal Loans Down to New 1937 Lows — Losses for Week 1-2 to 11-2 Points.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 3.—Some further readjustment occurred in the bond market today, although the general tendency was toward higher ground making it the second day the majority of U. S. Government issues made headway.

Gains in the Federal list ranged to 18-32 of a point while setbacks ranged to 9-32. Eight Treasury loans finished lower but the remaining 18 issues, which included Federal farm mortgage and home owners loan liens, continued the recovery movement.

Despite the rally in the last two days of the week, Governments closed considerably lower on the six-day period. The range of losses from the preceding Saturday, embracing all listed Federals, extended roughly from ½ point to 1½ points.

Minor fluctuations ruled in the domestic corporate and foreign sections of the market, with little to choose between gains and losses. The Associated Press averages were about even on the day.

American & Foreign Power 5s gained ⅝ to 77⅝, Pennsylvania Power & Light 4½s added ⅜ at 104⅞, Abitibi Power 5s jumped 3 points to 103, following publication of increased earnings last year, and International Mercantile Marine 6s gained 2½ to 88. Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron 6s were up 1 to 17.

Volume for all bonds amounted to $8,370,000 face value, against $5,127,000 the preceding Saturday.

Trading in U. S. Government loans was the highlight of the bond market last week, as mounting offerings drove Federal loans lower until Friday's rally.

Trading circles noted, however, a disposition by banks and insurance companies to enter bids following sharp reactions of Federal issues. Some expressed belief Treasury and Treasury-guaranteed loans would stabilize around a 3 per cent yield basis. This was partly borne out when, after Thursday's decline carried the list close to that basis, support improved. Other observers, however, saw little evidence the decline had run its course.

Losses in Governments were pronounced, with many off more than a point. All "Federals" set new 1937 lows.

Turnover for the week was fairly heavy. Federal bonds accounted for a heavier proportion than usual. Volume for March was $422,749,000 face amount, compared with $285,459,000 in February and $284,632,000 in March, 1936.

Stock Market Beats an Orderly Retreat in Week of Potentially Far-Reaching Developments

Slump in U. S. Bonds, Roosevelt's Stricture on Certain Commodity Prices and Labor Situation Included in News.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 3.—In a week heavily laden with potentially far-reaching developments, the Stock market beat an orderly retreat. In general, it was said, the market had underlying aid of bright industrial and trade news, but this was apparently insufficient to stem a moderate flow of offerings as the week progressed.

Unsettling factors were cited in Wall street as follows: U. S. Government Bonds slumped to new lows for the year, notwithstanding the statement of Secretary Morgenthau ample Government resources were in the offing as the week drew to a close, however.

President Roosevelt told a press conference durable goods prices such as steel and copper were too high. The time has come, he said, for the Government to discourage Federal spending for such products and quicken spending for consumers' goods.

Also throwing a blanket of uncertainty over the business and financial scene were disputes between workers and employes. The largest, involving 462,000 soft coal workers, was settled in one day, but strikes continued to cloud the outlook for motor and tire industries.

Agitating interest over a broad front was the question of prices—both for raw materials and finished goods. Commodities were erratic. Rubber, cotton and copper were under pressure toward the end of the week. Corn shot to a 12-year peak. Wheat was in demand.

Consumers' Goods Marked Up.

Quotations were marked up on such consumers' goods as gasoline, refrigerators, gas ranges, anthracite coal and trucks. And trade circles predicted a near-term increase in shoe prices.

More insistently business and banking observers put the question: Will higher prices generate consumer resistence or will increased farm buying power and wage increases serve to keep distribution of goods on an even keel?

The answer, certain circles said, will provide an important clue to the course of the stock market. For the short haul, however, trade and industrial momentum will afford considerable support, they said.

In sympathy with the drop in Government bonds, low yield corporate issues moved downward.

Sales during the week amounted to 7,248,250 shares, compared with 6,826,140 a week ago (5 days) and 8,441,750 a year ago. Total sales from Jan. 1 to date were 162,757,946 shares, compared with 185,566,835 a year ago and 53,410,549 two years ago.

Only in seven years out of 112 years for which records are available, trade authorities reported today, have current prices of corn in this country been exceeded. Adding to market uneasiness about widespread acute shortage of United States corn supplies—the generally accepted reason for prevalent steep upshoots of quotations following last year's meager crop—are advices that plowing for the 1937 new domestic corn crop has been held up by continuous cold weather in the Southwest. Reports are also at hand that wet soil and low temperatures have delayed field operations in the more Northern corn-producing states. Short covering in May delivery has not been overlooked in upturn.

Selective Rise at Week-End.

A few oils, steels, rails and specialties carried the recovery banner in week-end market and favored issues got back fractions to 2 or more points of Friday's decline.

While labor controversies were still plentiful, signing of the wage and hour agreement in the soft coal industry, together with evacuation of Chevrolet plants by sit-downers and the belief an amicable conclusion of Chrysler union negotiations was imminent, helped to bring in mild support for the beleaguered list.

In addition, the better action of U. S. Government securities tended to revive confidence.

A restraining influence, however, was still seen in the administration's thumbs-down policy regarding mounting costs of durable goods and its implied intention to shift purchasing from steels, coppers and other "heavy" lines into non-durable products. At the same time, it seemed yesterday's White House comments tended to lose some of their shock marketwise.

On the darker side of the speculative and investment picture was the spread of strike disorders at Wilmington and the movement of union workers in shutting down Ford's Kansas City plant.

Dealings were slow throughout, transfers totaling 643,050 shares for the two-hour session. The Associated Press average of 60 stocks regained .3 of a point at 71.1.

Developments in Oils.

Aiding the oils were forecasts crude protection is leveling off from its record top and expectations another price advance is likely in the near future.

The upturn in the major steels was coincident with thoughts that, even though the Government curtails orders, private industry and armament needs will keep the mills at high speed for some time to come.

The handful of carriers that tilted forward had the benefit of figures indicating traffic volume for the second quarter will show a wide gain over last year's volume.

Coppers and rubbers were backward and most of the utilities did little.

Chrysler and General Motors were ahead small fractions at 121½ and 61⅝, respectively.

May corn at Chicago jumped to $1.29¼ a bushel, its best mark in 18 years. Corn futures were up 2¼ to 4 cents a bushel and wheat ⅜ to 1¼ cents. Cotton gained 35 to 55 cents a bale.

Copper and rubber futures lost ground.

INDUSTRIAL ACTIVITY ADVANCE IS UNEVEN

Seasonally Adjusted Index Rises to 105.5 for the Week.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 3.—Industrial activity pushed forward somewhat this week but progress was uneven.

The Associated Press seasonally adjusted index rose to 105.5 from 105.3 (revised) the previous week and 82.0 in the like week a year ago.

Automobile production showed the effect of strikes by declining contra-seasonally.

Steel mill activity pushed ahead more than normal for this time of year, with output attaining a height last touched in August, 1929, and indicating tonnage exceeded only once in history of the industry—in May, 1929.

Bearing witness to the forward surge in the heavy goods division and brisk distribution of manufactured products to consumers, freight carloadings gained contra-seasonally.

A modest recession in residential building was explained by some observers in terms of rising construction costs.

Output of electricity was off less than seasonally, causing the index to reach a new 1937 high, and was described by experts in the light of lengthening daylight hours, but total energy was sharply higher than in the like 1936 week.

A somewhat less robust turnover in cotton goods was a factor in the decline in cotton manufacturing.

The index, with seasonally adjusted components based on latest available statistics and with 1929-30 taken as 100, compared as follows:

	Latest week.	Prev. Year week.	ago.
Composite index—	105.5	*105.3	82.0

FIRM CABLES FACTOR IN HIGHER COTTON MARKET

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 3.—Cotton advanced today on trade and commission house buying in partial response to firm cables. July rallied from 14.26c to 14.34c and closed at 14.30c, with final prices 7 to 11 points net higher.

The market opened 2 to 4 points higher, with advances at Liverpool partly offset by active foreign selling, especially for Far Eastern account.

There was also some scattered liquidation and hedge selling, although these offerings were light. After the initial setting had been absorbed, the market turned steadier on trade price-fixing and replacement commission house buying in the forward deliveries.

Nervousness was still in evidence owing to uncertainties over administration policies with reference to advancing commodity prices.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the close of the week was estimated at 84,000 bales, compared with 93,000 last year and 75,000 two years ago.

Spot steady; middling, 15.06c. n—Nominal.

Sharp rallies in cotton during the first half of the past week were partly lost in late trading.

The advance became pronounced with the reopening of foreign commodity markets after extended Easter holidays. Price rises abroad were accompanied by active foreign buying and larger demand from Wall Street. Near months for a while were firmer than later positions on the rally of about $3 to $4 a bale from the recent lows. Trade covering developed in old crop positions prior to expiration of the two-month marketing program for loan cotton on April 1, owing to fears that the spot situation would tighten further should the Commodity Credit Corporation fail to release additonal cotton. Later it was announced that the release program would be extended through April. Hedge selling increased against larger purchases of loan cotton.

During the advance little attention was given to prospects for a larger cotton acreage, ideas on which ranges from 10 to 15 per cent or more over last year. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics said domestic consumption plus exports this season may amount to more than 13,000,000 bales which would reduce the carryover on Aug. 1 to 4,500,000 bales.

Cotton goods markets were quiet with business largely offerings from second-hands.

Sales of loan cotton during the February and March marketing period totaled 1,150,000 bales and reduced loan stocks to about 1,850,000 bales.

Young Prosecutor's War on Rackets

trollers report to the bankers, who are unknown to runners and collectors. The "bank" changes its office every day. Therefore months of investigation were required before the attack could be made.

On that night Dewey and his staff took up quarters at the Clairmont Inn. At Grant's Tomb were assembled 70 rookie policemen in plain clothes, who were merely told that now they would have a chance to do some real police work. The recruits were chosen on the presumption that they had not been long enough on the force to form undesirable connections. It is believed at Dewey's office that policemen by brigades and thousands, in New York, are in the pay of the "numbers" racket.

The rookies were divided into squads and at zero hour set out for the rendezvous appointed in advance for each. Each reaching a given spot, the leader of each squad was to open a sealed envelope, directing him to raid a specified house nearby and seize particular men, whose names were in many instances given. The result was that 65 prisoners were arrested and six of the racket's subsidiary "banks" were seized. Among the captives was Joe Ison, one of two West Indians operating the racket, and its alleged attorney, Moe Weintraub. Despite the careful staff work and precautions for secrecy, warning at the last moment reached Ison's partner, Alexander Pompez, who fled to Mexico City and was not apprehended until 10 weeks later.

Dewey's Career.

The general-in-chief in this and campaigns more important was born at Owosso, Mich., on March 24, 1902. He was the son of a country editor and a distant cousin of Admiral Dewey. After working as a reporter for his father's paper, he entered the University of Michigan. As a member of the college glee club, he revealed a gifted bass-baritone. His friends predicted that one day he would sing the prologue to "I Pagliacci" before the curtain at the Metropolitan Opera House.

So, after being graduated in 1923, he went to Chicago to attend summer classes being conducted by Percy Rector Stephens, a vocal teacher. Dewey's voice so impressed him that Stephens awarded a scholarship to the young singer for further tuition in New York. That fall Dewey entered Columbia Law School and during his course of two years worked under Stephens and supported himself in part as a paid soloist at St. Matthew's and St. Timothy's churches in West Eighty-fourth street. But by 1925 Dewey convinced himself that he preferred law to roulades, and left the Metropolitan to shift for itself.

Record as Prosecutor.

He was admitted to the New York Bar in 1926 and engaged in private practice until 1931, when he was appointed—possibly because he was chairman of the board of directors of the New York Young Republican Club—as chief assistant to George Z. Medalie, United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York, which includes Manhattan, the Bronx, Richmond and several up-state counties. Here Dewey distinguished himself as a trial lawyer, winning convictions against James J. Quinlivan, former police officer of the vice squad; Enrique Miro, known as the Harlem policy king; Patrick Commerford, labor racketeer; and in particular, "Waxey" Gordon, "Irving Wexler," beer baron of New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Here also the young lawyer suffered the worst defeat of his career thus far. Charles E. Mitchell, New York banker, whom he prosecuted, was acquitted in a suit based on tax proceedings.

Dewey was in the midst of the Gordon trial when Medalie resigned on Nov. 19, 1933. Taking advantage of a statute which had not been invoked for 40 years, the Federal Judges of the district elected him United States Attorney. He held this interim post for a week until President Roosevelt appointed Martin Conboy, a Democrat, to the post. Dewey was 31 years old.

Praise From the Bench.

He continued in charge of the Gordon trial, with such success that the beer lord, reduced to tears, was sentenced to 10 years in prison, a fine of $20,000 and costs of $60,000. The charge was evasion of income taxes. In this case, which brought him the first wide-spread fame, Dewey employed a device which became one of the mainstays of his later strategy—full use of the resources of modern accounting. In unraveling the accounts of the beer mob, thickly involved with innumerable aliases, he and his staff examined many thousands of entries, deposits, withdrawals and transfers in a hundred banks. They checked some 100,000 telephone calls. At the conclusion of the trial, on Dec. 1, Federal Judge Coleman announced from the bench:

It is my firm conviction that never in this court has such fine work been done for the Government. If ever again I hear the criticism that there are no longer enthusiastic and able young men in the Government service, I shall refer the speakers to this case.

When Conboy was sworn in on Dec. 26, Dewey retired to serve without pay, as special counsel, in proceedings brought by the bar association of New York for the removal of Justice Harold L. Kunstler of the Municipal Court. The prosecutor, again delving into accounts, showed that the magistrate had banked $166,660 in four years, while drawing a total salary of $44,000. Whereupon Kunstler ended the exposure by resigning.

Early in 1935, J. Richard Davis, attorney for "Dutch" Schultz (Arthur Flegenheimer), then the country's No. 1 racketeer, made a Tammany speech in which it was asserted that under Mayor LaGuardia's Fusion government a policy game was flourishing to the tune of $500,000,0000 a year. Davis multiplied the figure by 10, but his address stirred the March grand jury to demand evidence on the subject from District Attorney William C. Dodge. Discontented with responses the jury asked to appoint a special prosecutor. When Dodge named Harold H. Corbin, the jurymen refused Corbin entrance to their rooms, and appealed to Gov. Lehman to appoint Thomas E. Dewey as special counsel. Thus was gained the nickname of "the runaway grand jury."

It is a tradition of New York County that its District Attorney should be a do-nothing official. The tradition of the Bronx, where sentiment is overwhelmingly law-abiding, is that the District Attorney shall be a two-fisted fighter. For that reason, organized crime is almost unknown in the Bronx, and crooks think not only twice but several times before venturing to cross the line between the two boroughs.

How Dewey Got the Job.

Under the law, it was in the Governor's power to name a special prosecutor in some particular case. No suit involving the policy racket was pending, but Gov. Lehman ordered Dodge, on pain of being superseded, to appoint one of four distinguished Republican lawyers, Charles Evans Hughes Jr., George Z. Medalie, Thomas D. Thatcher or Charles H. Tuttle. In identical letters, the four men declined to serve, and recommended Dewey. He was indorsed by the New York Bar Association, and a large portion of the press. Lehman yielded July 1, and appointed Dewey on his own terms. The Governor had objected that he was too young and not sufficiently renowned for the job.

Mayor LaGuardia agreed to supply whatever police aid should prove needful, and to press through the Board of Estimates such appropriations as Dewey asked for. Dewey busied himself with choosing a staff. His four principal colleagues were former associates of his, Assistant United States District Attorneys. The oldest is Jacob Joseph Rosenblum, 38, the prosecutor who sent banker Joseph Harriman to prison; the youngest is Murray Irwin Gurfein, 30, a former editor of the Harvard Law Review. In between came Barent TenEyck, prominent socially, from Princeton, and a translator of Scandinavian novels, and William Bernard Harlands, a product of Columbia, who became Dewey's right-hand man and also had charge of the investigation of 14 months leading to the prosecution of the restaurant racket.

The total staff consists today of 20 lawyers, ten accountants, ten investigators, four process servers, four clerks, two grand jury reporters, 19 stenographers, two telephone operators and four messengers.

Protective Measures.

On the fourteenth floor of the Woolworth Building, Dewey organized a sort of fortress for his particular purposes. It is guarded by detectives and policemen. It has a private elevator. It contains dozens of tiny cubicles, sound-proof, with frosted glass windows and doors, in which witnesses may be examined. His trunk telephone lines are inclosed in a tap-proof cable running straight into the main office of the telephone company.

Sworn in on July 29, Dewey struck his first blow Oct. 27, when, in a sudden round-up, he seized 22 of the leaders in New York's million-dollar-a-week "shylock racket." These money lenders preyed chiefly on the poor, not excluding W P A workers, and exacted as much as 1040 per cent a year. The victims were too terrified to identify the prisoners, save from behind the shelter of Venetian blinds. Because of the numerous charges against each defendant, it was possible to fix bail for the group at about $200,000. All but one, who escaped through a clerical error in the indictment, were convicted, and sentenced to imprisonment ranging from a few months in the workhouse, to five years at Sing Sing.

Reaching Luciano.

When "Dutch" Schultz and his gang were wiped out by rival mobsters in October, 1935, Dewey learned that his mantle had fallen upon Charles Luciano. Striking about for ways in which to attack the racketeer chieftain Dewey discovered that one of his minor enterprises was commercial prostitution, which he had organized on the chain-store system. The prosecutor had never been interested in attacking prostitution, but decided that this was his most promising avenue to reach and "put away" the notorious gang chief. The result was a spectacular onslaught, Feb. 2, 1936, during which 154 plain clothes men, in 41 simultaneous raids, seized 100 women and 10 men. Eleven were held in bail totaling $1,200,000. Luciano was arrested April 1 at Hot Springs, Ark. After a trial of four weeks, he and eight aids were found guilty under 62 counts each, on June 18. The leader was sent to Sing Sing for a maximum of 50 years. His lieutenants received sentences of from two to 25 years. Three of the defendants pleaded guilty.

Luciano's Vain Fight.

Half an hour after his first arrest, Luciano was free on $5000 bail. Dewey rushed to the telephone and spoke with the Governor of Arkansas, with the result that the gangster was promptly rearrested, and his bond sky-rocketed to $200,000. At Dewey's insistence, the Governor sent a squad of State rangers, with machine guns, to wrest Luciano from the hands of the local Sheriff. The prisoner's attorneys used every device to prevent his extradition, which they delayed for nearly three weeks. But on April 18, in handcuffs, Luciano was on his way to New York, crying out that he had been "kidnaped," that habeas corpus had been violated and that he was "only an innocent gambler."

He was convicted mostly on the evidence of disreputable women, a new thing in judicial records. These women, taken in Dewey's raid, were thunderstruck on reaching the Jefferson Market Court to find that their usual bondsmen were mysteriously missing. (The prosecutor had locked them all up.) So he had no difficulty in having them held as material witnesses and taking them to the sound and peep-proof cells of his office for questioning.

Broke Down Under Kindness.

They were agreeably surprised to be addressed politely with the words "Miss" and "Please," and to be supplied judiciously with drinks when their nerves grew too jittery. Under this mild treatment, most of them broke down and told all.

But in case of need, Dewey is capable of taking stern measures with stubborn witnesses. He has not hesitated, on occasion, to bring them to terms with threats of income tax prosecutions. More than one witness, refusing to testify before the grand jury, has been convicted of contempt and thrown into jail for three to six months.

At the time of his arrest, Luciano was the biggest personage in American gangland. He had a hand in almost every New York racket. Like most "big shots" of the modern pattern, he was engaged, as a cloak, in several legitimate businesses. He lived in a suite at the Waldorf-Astoria and was a well-known, free-spending figure in the pseudo-smart night life of the city.

Restaurant Racket.

After more than a year of investigation into the restaurant racket, Dewey on Oct. 20, arrested 14 men, including six union leaders and two lawyers. They were charged under many counts with conspiracy and embezzlement of union funds. After the repeal of prohibition "Dutch" Schultz and his lieutenant, Jules Martin, decided to turn their talents to employment in the field of union labor. In the view of a gangster, the unions possessed inviting legal immunities, and any attempt at prosecution would be met with a widespread outcry of a capitalist plot against labor.

These mobsters gained control of Local 16 of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes' International Alliance, and Local 302 of the Delicatessen Counterman and Cafeteria Workers' Union. To do this it was necessary first to murder the secretary of the latter and the labor chief of the former. With such examples before their eyes, the surviving leaders capitulated. Thereafter, the gangsters, through these leaders, were able to call or withdraw strikes at their pleasure. This arm they used to extort tribute from 300 restaurants, cafeterias and night clubs. Hundreds of workers, parading in picket lines for improved wages and conditions, as they thought, were actually demonstrating for the enrichment of criminals of whom they had never heard.

Schultz and Martin in 1933 organized the Metropolitan Restaurant and Cafeteria Association, which restaurant proprietors were permitted to join at fees ranging from $1000 to $10,000. They were promised in return immunity from labor troubles. Schultz and Martin were assassinated but their association carried on. Dewey succeeded in convicting seven of the defendants who will appear in court Wednesday for sentence.

Dewey's Reply to Protests.

As the gangsters had correctly foreseen, this trial aroused a nation-wide protest that Dewey was using his office in part to persecute union labor. Petitions on behalf of the defendants and denouncing the special prosecutor showered upon Gov. Lehman. Socialist and Communist newspapers rang with invective.

Dewey's view was that he was not responsible if union officials, among others, happened to be swept up in his dragnet; and that the result of the trial was that the rank and file members of two unions had been rescued from betrayal and robbery by corrupt, or weak leaders and their criminal allies.

He produced evidence to show that $250,000 had been embezzled from the treasuries of these unions, and that of every $3 of dues collected, $1 had been paid out on the order of officials for their own use and that of their gangster associates. Addressing the trial jury concerning the methods of extortion employed, he declared: "These strikes were for the private gain and advantage of the conspirators, and not the purpose of bettering the conditions and wages of the employes."

It was pointed out that "Dutch" Schultz compelled Local 16 to appoint his personal lawyer, J. Richard Davis, as its attorney; and that a high official of the American Federation of Labor, who set out to expel gangster influences from his union, does not dare ride about Chicago save in an armored car.

Restaurant Racket Scotched.

The turning point of the restaurant racket trial came on its opening day, Jan. 13, when Louis Beitcher, collector for the syndicate, pleaded guilty and became a witness for the state. That one collapse enabled Dewey to withdraw 100 of his 110 witnesses.

Despite his successes, Prosecutor Dewey is under no illusions that he had wiped out organized crime in Manhattan. The utmost claim he is willing to make is that several rackets have been compelled temporarily "to fold up." Lawlessness, in his opinion, is an eternal problem, and the battle against it must be planned for long years of sustained, constant and relentless effort.

Doesn't Look the Part.

If a great prosecutor, like a great detective, should never look the part, then Thomas E. Dewey is ideally cast for his role. It is true that he possesses one magnificent feature—a pair of wide-set brown eyes that, are dazzling, luminous. Otherwise, his protective coloring is such that, in a crowd, one would not glance at him twice. He is neither well nor ill dressed. He is 5 feet, 8 inches tall, weighs 160 pounds and has the flat surfaces of a squash player and oarsman. The head is well-shaped but not massive, the hair and complexion are swarthy, and he sports, perhaps as a counterpoise to his youth, a small mustache, overhanging a full mouth and hard chin. His voice is that of a singer, clear and resonant without effort. From his quiet mien, one judges that he would not know how to pound a table or roar at a witness.

The general impression which he conveys is that of a small-town boy earnestly making good in the big city. You might, by the same token, regard a mongoose as the most artless and amiable of creatures. Yet the mongoose is a redoubtable killer of cobras.

Nation's Racketeer Set-Up

MORE stringent than those of the President of the United States are the regulations of Special Prosecutor Thomas E. Dewey's press conferences. The President may be quoted when his permission is given, and the gist of his remarks may be conveyed through indirect discourse. With Dewey, though he talks freely, every word is "off the record." Owing to the exigencies of his position, it is a rule of his office that neither he nor any member of his staff may deliver speeches, give interviews, or be quoted in print. Nevertheless, the following analysis may be presented as embodying the unofficial views of Dewey's staff concerning the crime problem:

NATIONAL SET-UP.—There is only one "mob" of criminals in the United States. It is a loosely federated association, without a "president." Rival domains are scrupulously respected. There has not been a gang killing over disputed territory in many years. Each "province" is controlled by a chieftain who never personally commits a crime. These leaders fraternally render services among themselves. For instance, a Chicago chieftain is always glad to supply a squad of unknown killers to "bump off" the enemies of his ally in New York.

POLICE. — The "numbers" racket has some of the advantages of the bootlegger, in that millions of Americans love to gamble. There is a widespread public sentiment in its behalf. Therefore, it is the favorite device of the gangster for bribing the police, who feel much less scruple than would be true of usury or prostitution. Policy flourishes particularly in Detroit, Baltimore, Washington and St. Louis. It is the belief of Prosecutor's Dewey's office that New York policemen, by brigades and thousands, are in the pay of the "numbers" racket. In each of Dewey's major investigations, the key policeman was "reached" and "went wrong."

LABOR.—In his general crusade against crime, Prosecutor Dewey has encountered numerous instances wherein gangsters have seized control of labor organizations. They rarely become members of unions, but obtain command by capturing the leaders. Sometimes a labor official has been bribed. Oftener a mobster "gets something on" a corrupt leader, and handles him with menaces of exposure. "Dutch" Schultz (Arthur Flegenheimer), No. 1 gangster of his day, conquered two unions of restaurant workers in New York by procuring the murder of honest officials. Surviving leaders were terrorized into surrender. Thereafter Schultz could start or end strikes at his pleasure, and used this weapon to extort money from employers. According to Prosecutor Dewey's office, gangsters have for years been powerful in moving New York locals. Louis (Lepke) Buchalter and Jacob (Gurrah Jake) Shapiro, whom Dewey convicted in November, 1935, had long preyed upon workers and employes in the rabbit fur industry.

POLITICS.—The most powerful man in New Jersey is not Mayor Hague of Jersey City or Gov. Hoffman. The boss of the State is Abe (Longy) Zwilliman, a Newark gangster. A certain mobster in New York is the "Supreme Court" in all gangland killings. His word determines life or death throughout the local underworld. The criminal enters government by the way of the political club, basis of all party organization, and makes himself valuable through strong-arm services on election day and various homicidal favors. He builds up connections, reaching in cases into the courts, which are "frightful to contemplate."

STEP IN CONDEMNATION OF RAIL RIGHT-OF-WAY

University City Aldermen Authorize Attorney to Proceed in Rock Island Case.

The University City Board of Aldermen yesterday authorized the City Attorney to prepare a condemnation ordinance and proceed with the condemnation of the Rock Island Railroad right-of-way within the University City limits as the first step in final arrangements convert it into a relief highway to lighten traffic congestion on Delmar and Forsythe boulevards.

Tentative consent of the railroad and the City of St. Louis has been obtained for a plan at pay the railroad $10,000 for the right-of-way from De Baliviere avenue in St. Louis two and a half miles west to where the tracks cut diagonally across Forsythe boulevard at the southern edge of University City, Mayor David L. Millar of University City announced.

Under the contract, which is awaiting formal approval by the City of St. Louis, about $5600 of the cost would be borne by University City and $4400 by St. Louis. Slightly more than half of the length of the right of way runs through University City. The tracks, which run part of the way just north of Lindell boulevard and Washington University, have been abandoned for through train traffic. Coal for the university and street materials for University City is being received over the tracks, but the university has agreed to haul its coal in trucks.

In addition, the Polar Wave & Fuel Co. has agreed not to object to the removal of the switch tracks serving its property at Forsythe boulevard, and the St. Louis Material & Supply Co. has agreed that the spur serving it on the east of Forsythe may be abandoned in return for the cities' agreement to provide a new spur track coming in from the west of Forsythe.

The proposed boulevard would be 40 feet wide. Traffic on Delmar boulevard in the loop area of University City has become dangerously congested, Millar said, and there is no open east and west thoroughfare west of Skinker boulevard between Forsythe and Delmar.

Efforts to acquire the right of way began 10 years ago, when the railroad was using the tracks for through traffic. A tentative offer of $165,000 was made then by the two cities for the right-of-way. The matter was dropped, but was revived by Mayor Millar in 1933. A plan was proposed then by which the right-of-way would be acquired all the way west to Page avenue for $27,500, but it was abandoned because of objection by some shippers in Clayton and on Olive Street road.

TURNED the TOWN OVER to the WOMEN

By ELLWOOD DOUGLASS
Of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine Staff

But Greentop, Missouri's, Feminine Board of Trustees Is Ready to Let the Men, Who Elected Them a Year Ago, Have Another Fling at the Job if They Want It.

GREENTOP, Missouri.

THE first Tuesday in April—day after tomorrow—is election day in Greentop. And most of the 300-odd citizens of the town are wondering if it will again be Ladies' Day.

It was Ladies' Day last April. And nobody knows for sure if it will be Ladies' Day again. One, maybe two of the five women who have run the town for the last year is or are fed up with public office; but they may have very little to say about the election. The reason is that there's no campaign in Greentop; when the day rolls around, somebody gets out a "slate" and the 50 or 60 voters talk it over for an hour or two in the civic centers along Greentop's main street (U. S. Highway 63) and the first thing you know, five of the people on that slate have been elected.

Generally there's only one slate, got out by the retiring trustees or somebody else. It was that way last year; the women's slate was sponsored by a mysterious "somebody"; but the point to remember against attempting to forecast the outcome of Tuesday's election is that official greatness, so to speak, is not achieved but thrust upon them.

So, in spite of the becoming reluctance of the Village Mothers to remain in office, the men of Greentop speculate on the possibility that their town may go the way of Urbandale, which seems destined to remain in feminine hands, from now on. Urbandale is a smaller community 58 miles south of Greentop and a quarter-mile west of No. 63, in the southern residential fringe of Moberly.

It has one neatly kept street with formal entrance gates, 13 large and rather pretty frame houses or rather pretentious houses of brick. In those 13 houses are about 30 voters, significantly more than half of whom are feminine. But majority control is not the only factor; the masculine minority seems well content to leave Urbandale's official business in the hands of the better half—or, by the voting lists, three-fifths. When the reporter stopped there on a Sunday morning and asked one of the masculine citizens a question about the local government, he replied, "Wait a minute; I'll ask my wife."

There are reasons, besides that dominant fifth at the polls, for the wholly residential community to have a wholly feminine board of trustees. Except for details contingent to Urbandale's sanitation and water connection, the chief duty of Mayor Ruth Fleming and her feminine associates is the maintenance of the attractive street and environs. There is even a woman Marshal, but her duties are lightened by an unofficial deputy in every home thoroughly capable of keeping the masculine element in order.

The Urbandale matriarchy started as a joke 10 years ago, when County Judge W. P. Sparrow appointed woman trustees upon incorporation. But the ladies made 'em like it when men gathered to heckle the first board meeting at the Fleming home, and the ladies have made them like it ever since.

There is a suspicion in some quarters up here that Greentop's Ladies' Day last April started as a joke, too. If so, it was consummated in dead earnest. The victorious ladies, one or two of whom, all wittingly, defeated their own husbands—some of them had no idea they were running until they heard over the radio that they had been elected—have taken the duties of office with a seriousness not always manifested by the men.

Most of the business men along No. 63 in Greentop have served a term on the town board, some of them several terms; Ira Robinson, the 1935 Mayor, for example, a dozen terms off and on. Some of the townspeople may have thought a change was in order. The veteran office-holders themselves thought so emphatically.

LAST spring there was a little talk of putting women on the School Board. Two, in fact, were elected, but neither served. One could not serve because her husband was on the board at the same time, and the other would not as the sole representative of her sex. But, while that was on the fire, R. W. Cavender published in his Greentop Reporter the suggestion that they make a clean sweep by electing woman trustees.

It may have been as a result that, on election day, a neatly printed "slate" of women appeared among the groups, mostly men, along Greentop's main street. Like Cavender's editorial, it was greeted at first with chuckles, but sage observers noted a rising undertone of purpose.

Late in the afternoon Mrs. Ira Pearce heard that she and other women had been "slated." She didn't take it seriously for at least two hours, maybe four. What changed her mind was the news that she had been elected Mayor. Two-thirds of the votes were cast by men.

Actually, the trustees elect their own officers, but in ordinary course they name as chairman, or Mayor, the one who gets the most votes in the election. And Mrs. Pearce had got the most votes. But still she didn't want to serve, and neither did the others—

Mrs. John W. Young, wife of a lumberman; Mrs. C. H. VanOsdol, a physician's wife; Mrs. Floyd Beck, school teacher and wife of the local cobbler, and Mrs. Bryan Arnold, whose husband is a garage man.

But under the slogan, "Don't Throw Greentop down," men prevailed upon them to serve. And some of the men consider it an argument for the possibility that most of them, if elected, might be persuaded to serve again.

Mrs. Pearce, who operates a beauty parlor, says she's had enough, and she says it positively. Mrs. Young, the town clerk, says she's had her turn and it's time for someone else to step in; if Greentop wants to make it another Ladies' Day, there are plenty of other women in town for the office. But all of them agree that it has been a pleasant and enlightening experience, and they wouldn't have missed it for worlds.

A view of Greentop's main street.

The assertion has been made that the women are too busy for the office. In addition to Mrs. Pearce's business and Mrs. Beck's profession, Mrs. Young helps out in the postoffice, Mrs. VanOsdol, the treasurer, assists the doctor, and Mrs. Arnold looks after the books in her husband's garage.

Masculine reaction has been to take that as a challenge to the importance and demands of their own labors; and to point out that, however weighty the responsibility, the town's business is mostly transacted on one evening a month, the first Wednesday. Mrs. Young clarifies that assertion a little by pointing out that all of the trustees are active in lodge, club and church work and that the Eastern Star, the "S. M. D. Club" and several church groups all meet in the first week of the month, so that several of the trustees find four or five evenings taken up.

In fact, the ladies' board promptly changed the night for the trustees' meeting from the first Monday, since that was lodge night and the date for lodge meetings could not be changed except by state-wide action.

That was probably their first action officially but not unofficially. Unofficially, the first thing they did was to study up on parliamentary practice and the ordinances and procedure under which fourth class cities operate, Greentop in particular.

From that business-like beginning they moved on to a year's business that included two reforms and two questions of moment. They had the first reform in mind from the moment they were sworn in by retiring Mayor Robinson at the local poultry house. They wanted a proper meeting place.

Formerly, the men trustees had met at the store or office of one of the members. Now the lady trustees meet in the board room of the local bank building. And, adds one of the officials with pride, they meet on time—which may be classified as a reform in itself.

THE other principal reform was the appointment of a board of health. Greentop ordinances provided for it, but appointment of its members had been neglected for a term or two.

First of the questions of moment was renewal of the 10-year street lighting franchise of the Missouri Power and Light Company at about $30 a month. It called for special meetings and a lot of study in an unfamiliar field. The trustees say proudly that negotiations were strictly business with no chivalrous concessions by the power company; and they wound up with the company committed to the style of equipment which the town wanted and agreeing to pay the cost of the special franchise election.

The other important matter was repair of the hatchery building, which is owned by the city. When investigators reported at last month's meeting that extensive repairs were needed, perhaps even a new roof, the trustees felt that it was not a question for them to decide arbitrarily on the eve of retirement, and laid it over for the new board to consider. But there is a discernible feeling in Greentop that some, at least, of the same trustees may have it to consider again next Wednesday nig

WRECKED the LIVES of 10 MEN— and HER OWN

The Amazing Career of Irmgard Bruns Which Drove Her Lovers to Death or Disgrace and Brought Her to Prison.

Irmgard Bruns.

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

BUDAPEST, Hungary.

A VAMPIRE, according to Webster, is "one who lives by preying on others; an extortioner; . . . hence . . . a mercenary, seductive type of character; commonly a woman who uses her attraction to win passionate love and to bring her lover to a debased, humiliated, or impoverished, condition. . . ." No one could write a more vivid and comprehensive definition of the woman, Irmgard Bruns, whose ugly and fantastic story has just been brought up to date in a Hungarian criminal court. Despite the truth of this accusation the success with which this weird beauty has evaded prosecution in her consistently malignant past makes her present predicament about the unlikeliest imaginable ending to her vengeful and misdirected career.

The fact that two men dealt her an injustice might be considered a mitigating factor in the subsequent life of Irmgard, the vampire, were it not for the wanton excesses of her malevolence. She is known to have brought 10 men to their doom—five were suicides, two humiliated and badly wounded, two disgraced and one insane. In each case she used at least one, sometimes more than one lover as a foil to drive these to desperation. Thus at least a score of poor wretches were made her pawns and victims. Doubtless there were others. And certainly there were more than enough to top the notorious career of the vampire she imitated, that strange and terrible woman, Countess Tarnowska.

The Countess' career, which ended in impoverished and impenitent death during the early part of the World War, may as well be cited. It is hard to believe any woman could be more flagrantly wicked than Countess Tarnowska. Yet here is one who consciously and deliberately essayed it—and succeeded.

Lest she be forgotten, Maria Tarnowska, the daughter of a wealthy Russian nobleman, eloped with a notorious roue, Count Wassilijevitch Tarnowsky, Governor of Kiev Province, at the age of 16. Shocked and disillusioned by her husband's early and open infidelity, she candidly set out to revenge herself on as many of the male sex as she could attract. The young Count Tolstoi, nephew of the novelist, was her first victim. He blew out his brains beneath the window through which he discovered his paramour in the arms of his dearest friend. The friend afterwards followed suit. The third intended victim, Baron Stahl, found her playing the same game with him, but instead of allowing himself to become the prey of her duplicity, he went to the Countess' husband. Tarnowsky was utterly indifferent, but to protect his public honor agreed to accompany the Baron to where Countess Tarnowska was to have a rendezvous with her second lover. They surprised her a moment after the latter had attested the extremity of his passion by shooting himself through the hand to gratify her whimsical sense of fun.

Humiliated by the interruption and the pain, the lover, Baron Bergowsky, determined to force the husband into a duel by paying attentions to Countess Tarnowska at a great ball the Count was giving the following evening. The unscrupulous husband was too clever to be drawn by this. He whipped out a revolver and shot the young man on the spot.

Baron Stahl, who should have been well out of it by this time, remained infatuated with the Countess even after this episode, became desperate over the subsequent failure of his love-making and ended up by shooting himself dead. Soon afterwards two young officers killed each other in a duel over her. Countess Tarnowska, only 25 and still frisky and incorrigible, finally divorced the Governor and involved herself simultaneously with three other men, first marrying one of them, an elderly and extremely wealthy man named Kovarensky. The other two were Kovarensky's nephew, a promising young Russian official, and Prilukov, the lawyer who had gotten her her divorce.

This was an intrigue to end all intrigues. It ended in undoing all the parties to it, including its instigator, but Countess Tarnowska was willing to risk that. She met her husband's nephew and Prilukov in Vienna, showed the former a telegram from her husband warning her against the young man. The latter instantly set off for Venice, where Kovarensky was stopping, and murdered him. Italian police arrested him and had Prilukov and the Countess extradited. All three were tried for the murder. The men were immediately convicted, but one of the jurymen announced during the Countess' trial that he had fallen in love with her and couldn't convict her. She was subsequently convicted in spite of him, got eight years in prison and lost her beauty while serving out the sentence. She died last fall in the slums of Florence where she had spent her last friendless years living on meager gifts from her family.

At the time of Countess Tarnowska's imprisonment Irmgard Bruns was a ravishing beauty, still in high school. She never knew the Russian woman, but like everyone in Europe, she knew all about her and probably paid her covert admiration even while despising her. In those days Irmgard was as fresh and innocent as she was beautiful—or so they say.

SHE was the daughter of a rich Berlin business man, apparently a pretty cold and unsympathetic sort of father, a Prussian imbued with several of the traditional and generally unpopular traits considered outside Prussia to be typical of the North German. At any rate, Herr Bruns was fairly brutal with the girl when she announced that she wanted to marry a dashing young law student. She was tall, fair and blonde; an exquisite child. An ordinary father would have found it difficult to deny her so dear a wish, especially since there was nothing precipitate about the request. She and her student were perfectly willing to wait until he had been admitted to the bar and gotten a court appointment—the necessary apprenticeship of pre-war German lawyers.

But Herr Bruns was ambitious. Not only did he refuse to listen to her pleas to marry the young man she was in love with, but in the teeth of them he accepted another marriage offer for her. The man he selected for his son-in-law was a rich manufacturer of electric motors, a man nearly his own age, a business acquaintance. Krause, was the fellow's name. Bewhiskered and paunchy he seemed a perfect monster to a school girl with her head full of a dashing athletic student with dueling scars on his cheeks and a distinguished tri-color ribbon across his virile young jutting chest. Irmgard's fine blue eyes ran over as she met the fat industrialist at the altar and took him as her husband, for better or for worse. In future she would let others do the weeping.

Krause lived in the beautiful university town of Bonn-on-Rhine and had built his factories on the outskirts. At the time Bonn was far and away the most fashionable of the German universities, the Kaiser himself having spent his student days there. The place offered many opportunities for a beautiful young bride who took not the slightest interest in her husband and Irmgard promptly availed herself of them. She set out methodically to punish her husband by the most obvious torture device that occurred to her. A young law student became interested in her. She encouraged his advances, urged him to visit her at home while her husband was at his office, and one day brought the whole thing to a climax by confronting her impassioned lover with her jealous husband. The incident was particularly pointed by the fact that Krause had come home during the early afternoon to surprise his wife with an exquisite diamond ring. In such circumstances there were only two things for a husband to do in order to save what was then quaintly entitled his honor. And Herr Krause was no good at saber. He promptly blew his brains out, leaving Irmgard a tidy fortune as her reward.

At this point the young woman might still have redeemed herself. There is no exact information as to what happened to her fiance, but there is no indication that she showed any inclination to return to him. Presumably she had tasted her first blood and if her subsequent actions are any indication, she proposed to drink deep.

For she immediately set about making a capture that could have been inspired only by the most sanguinary thirst. Her prey was an elderly colonel who, having established a formidable reputation as a rake, had reformed and set up as a moral paragon. Being immune to female charms (in his own estimation) and having found it easy to turn from libertinism to bigotry, he was a worthy adversary. Since Irmgard was only 19 years old at this time, it can be taken for granted that she did not fall in love with him. Her subsequent ruse was closely modeled on Countess Tarnowska's trick on Baron Stahl.

She knew that the Colonel was deeply involved in debt and that he was looking for a rich wife. She encouraged him to think she would accept him if he should offer marriage. Meanwhile she took coy liberties with his revised code of morals, leading him on against his better judgment and in despite of his obviously honorable intention to marry her for her money. Probably it was the first time this doughty veteran of countless amatory excursions and duels had ever been encouraged to enter an illicit courtship, when he himself sought legal marriage. Finally he weakened and agreed to a rendezvous at her house. He arrived, noticed an intriguing gap in the window blind as he approached her door, couldn't resist peeping through the bedroom window. And inside he beheld to his mortification, Irmgard in the arms of his youngest lieutenant. He didn't bother to knock. Next morning they found him dead in his rooms.

Apparently Irmgard was touched and amused by the naive reactions of the military. Instead of heading for the southern beaches to recover from her part in the tragedy, she promptly hied herself off to Saarbruecken, the Western garrison town. It took her no time at all to repeat her triumph there. A handsome lieutenant named Von Schmidthoff met her at a ball, asked her to sit out a dance, and was found dead in his quarters when his orderly came in with the coffee next morning. The verdict of the military board which investigated his death was: Suicide by his own pistol; motive unknown. Irmgard could cut a third notch in her vanity case.

That happened in the summer of 1914. Countess Tarnowska was spending her seventh year in an Italian prison. The war broke out and Saarbruecken became too hot for non-combatants. Irmgard decided to let the Allies deal with the rest of the Imperial Army, at least for the time being. She moved to Berlin. Her next victim was a civilian, Herr Doktor Kurt Franke, an urbane and worldly gentleman, one of the capital's most celebrated trial lawyers and one of its favorite social lions. Franke's attainments as a raconteur were fabulous. His experience in the courts supplied the material for stories that were a sure cure for the problems of smart hostesses. He was 40 years old and at the height of his popularity when he fell into Irmgard's clutches at a tea dance. After a courtship that scandalized the gossip purveyors, they announced their engagement.

DR. FRANKE'S military class was still beyond the draft limits and seemed unlikely to be called out for service at the front. It wasn't considered incumbent for men of 40 to volunteer, not at this stage of the war anyway. But suddenly the attorney decided to enlist. Without explaining or even telling his nearest friends, he walked into a recruiting station one day and demanded enlistment papers. Two months later he was killed in action. There was no doubt in the minds of his friends. "Victim No. 4," was their only comment. Irmgard's reputation was a byword throughout Germany by this time. She was regarded as being nearly as dangerous a menace as the French.

But for the space of five years her activities were obscure. Perhaps she was taken on by the secret service on the theory that she would be less dangerous as an ally than as an enemy within the ranks, for when next heard from, in Poland in 1920, she had a secret mission. Whatever her exact duties, the ruin of reputations and careers seems to have been not incompatible with them. Her greatest triumph in Warsaw was the conquest of Major Benh, a military hero of the finest sort. Benh had fought under Pilsudski. He had as many decorations as a flagship at a regatta and didn't wear them. He was a quiet, studious man, a hard worker. He was a widower whose two daughters were about the same age as Irmgard, with whom he became infatuated suddenly one night at the opera.

Surprisingly enough, she accepted his first proposal of marriage and urged him to plan the ceremony for as early a date as possible. He didn't know it, but the reason for her sudden decision had a good deal more to do with the French Secret Service office in Warsaw than with his somewhat withered charms. When she discovered that marriage to a Polish officer wouldn't help her escape dishonor and possible death at the hands of the French agents, she promptly discarded Benh and made a dash for the border. Benh was shocked and baffled; being a direct, honest sort of man, he couldn't conceive of perfidy in a woman as lovely and affectionate as Irmgard had seemed to him. So he

It's the 'LIFE of RILEY' for TOMMY ATKINS

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

LONDON, England.

TOMMY ATKINS, that famous fighting man immortalized in verse by the late Rudyard Kipling during the reign of Queen Victoria, at last has won the "extry rations" and the "rational" treatment that he expressed desire for in the well-known barrack room ballad. In fact he's going to get even more than the Tommy Atkins who mixed with Fuzzy-Wuzzy in the Soudan ever conjured up in his wildest dreams.

The reason? Just as Kipling wrote, "It's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' 'Tommy, fall be'ind,'" when the doves of peace are cooing, "but it's 'Please to walk in front, sir,' when there's trouble in the wind." And for several years there's been a scarcity of the Tommy Atkinses to do the walking in front. Right now there seems to be so much possibility of trouble, in the winds blowing from the Continent, that Great Britain has appropriated its largest defense fund since World War days. But without recruits, the cheapest of war materials, the army high command is stumped. It must have recruits to transform into privates and it's going to have them.

That's why concessions are being made to Tommy Atkins. That's why the army is becoming a cross between a country club and a boarding school. That's why old sergeants, hardheaded about their liquor and their drill, are contemplating transferring to "nursing 'omes" where they can be strict once more with their charges.

That's why Alfred Duff Cooper, the War Minister, launched a new program a couple of weeks ago that the veterans say is "cushy" with crumpets and coddling galore. First and foremost, civilians are being hired to do the fatigue duty. No longer can a hectoring infantry non-com make his bite worse than his bark by assigning the victim of his wrath to a day of spud and onion peeling with the kitchen police detail. No longer can a bowlegged top sergeant of cavalry, with sense of humor more warped than his legs, call for two volunteers to drive an automobile and then put them on a stable cleaning detail. Scrubbing, sweeping and policing here and policing there—all such onerous duty is to be done by the civilian janitors.

Secondly, there are to be no more deductions from a private's pay for such things as hair cuts, laundry, cleaning material and renewal of equipment. This means that he will be paid the full 14 shillings a week that he has earned instead of just 10.

Furthermore, every effort is being made, Mr. Cooper told the House of Commons in announcing his program, to improve the barracks. Central heating is being installed, sleeping, dining and bathing rooms are being combined under one roof in the new barracks that are going up like mushrooms. There will be more and better quarters for married men.

"We are endeavoring to introduce," the War Minister explained, "the principle of the sitting room in which the men can read, write and listen to the radio without going to the canteen."

Knowing that the Navy never lacks recruits, the War Minister inquired into the reasons for this and came to the conclusion that it was largely because the Navy served four meals a day while the Army served only three. Why, he asked, should a man afloat get one more meal than a man ashore? Because the salty sea air whets his appetite, he was told. The answer didn't satisfy him, though, when he learned that Jack ashore s t i l l "glommed" his four squares a day—even when on duty in a stuffy arsenal where the air is more musty than briny. Therefore he decreed that the Army should have "tea" in the afternoon, the "tea" to consist of sandwiches and milk or a cup of hot tea. The cash allowance for troops on foreign duty was increased. Troops on home stations were given butter in addition to their margarine.

THERE were cheers in the sedate House of Commons when Cooper came to the four-a-day matter. Members who were former service men pointed out that meals are more than food to a soldier since they help to break up the day. Some opponents said the whole program was merely one to "kid kids into a dose of foot-slogging." But now that the program is under way, the consensus seems to be that anything is preferable to conscription — which looms around the corner. As the War Minister bluntly said, it is a serious matter when the Army's authorized strength of 168,900 is already 21,000 below this figure and will be another 20,000 under within a year if the recruits still fail to sign up.

It is considered likely, too, that promotion will be made easier as a result of the complaint that the young aristocrats graduated from Sandhurst (Great Britain's West Point) monopolize all the commissions.

Meanwhile, the recruiting sergeants, who are the equal in persuasive ability of many a life insurance or used car salesman, are making the most of the glamorous appeal of the King's uniform. Almost a year ago, representatives of all the principal regiments of the line were sent to every major recruiting station in order to push the attraction of a uniform to the utmost.

When a prospect is drawn in from the street by the power of a striking poster, a letter from a friend who has "taken the King's shilling," and finds it worth while, or by a few preliminary words on the corner with the recruiter, he is ushered into a room full of stalwart guardsmen, hussars, lancers, and yeomen all immaculately caparisoned in most resplendent dress uniforms.

Bedraggled and unpromising as the prospective recruit may be, the veterans crack their heels to attention for him as though he were a colonel and even march to and fro or do a few about faces.

"Ah, me lad," the sergeant says in a melodious croon that hides the drill ground bark, "never did the Empire's defenders wear finer cloth—what girl could resist you if she saw you in that Life Guard's scarlet tunic with white plumes on the helmet? And if that doesn't strike your fancy cast an eye at this bombardier in coat of blue—see how it fits like a glove. Mark the yellow facings, the gold belt buckle, the cut of those swanky breeches and the leather in that boot! Now here's a Royal Scots Fusilier in Kilmarnock bonnet. His is a Lowland regiment so he doesn't get the Highlander's kiltie, but he has the Highland doublet with ornamented cuffs and skirts, and trousers of tartan pattern. A striking figure, eh wot?"

If the lad is not goggle-eyed enough by now to sign anything that is shoved before him, he probably will be when the big rawboned Seaforth Highlander snaps to attention in feather bonnet, scarlet doublet with buff facings, kilt of Mackenzie tartan, and red and white woolen stockings. Next to the Highlander is a Royal Horse artilleryman in blue riding breeches with broad red stripe, jack boots, cylindrical fur busby and short ribbed jacket.

Across from him is a lancer in double breasted tunic with plastron reaching from shoulders to the waist line and wearing the Polish czapka with drooping plumes. They're all there— Royal Engineers, South Wales Borderers, Coldstream Foot Guards, the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, the Prince of Wales' Volunteers, the Royal Wiltshire Yeomanry.

Recruiting Poster in use by the British Army.

In case the doctor is a little too searching in his examination of the applicant, he may become a recruit under the Aldershot experimental plan. Those accepted under this arrangement are sent to a special barracks at Canterbury (provided there is nothing organically wrong with them) where an attempt is made to bring them up to standard by special physical training and a special diet.

If the applicant does not want to sign up for seven years, he can sign up under a special enlistment whereby, at the end of six months, he can get his discharge. He must, however, turn out for two weeks' training every year for the next five years if he elects to leave the Army after serving six months. In this way, a small reserve is built up.

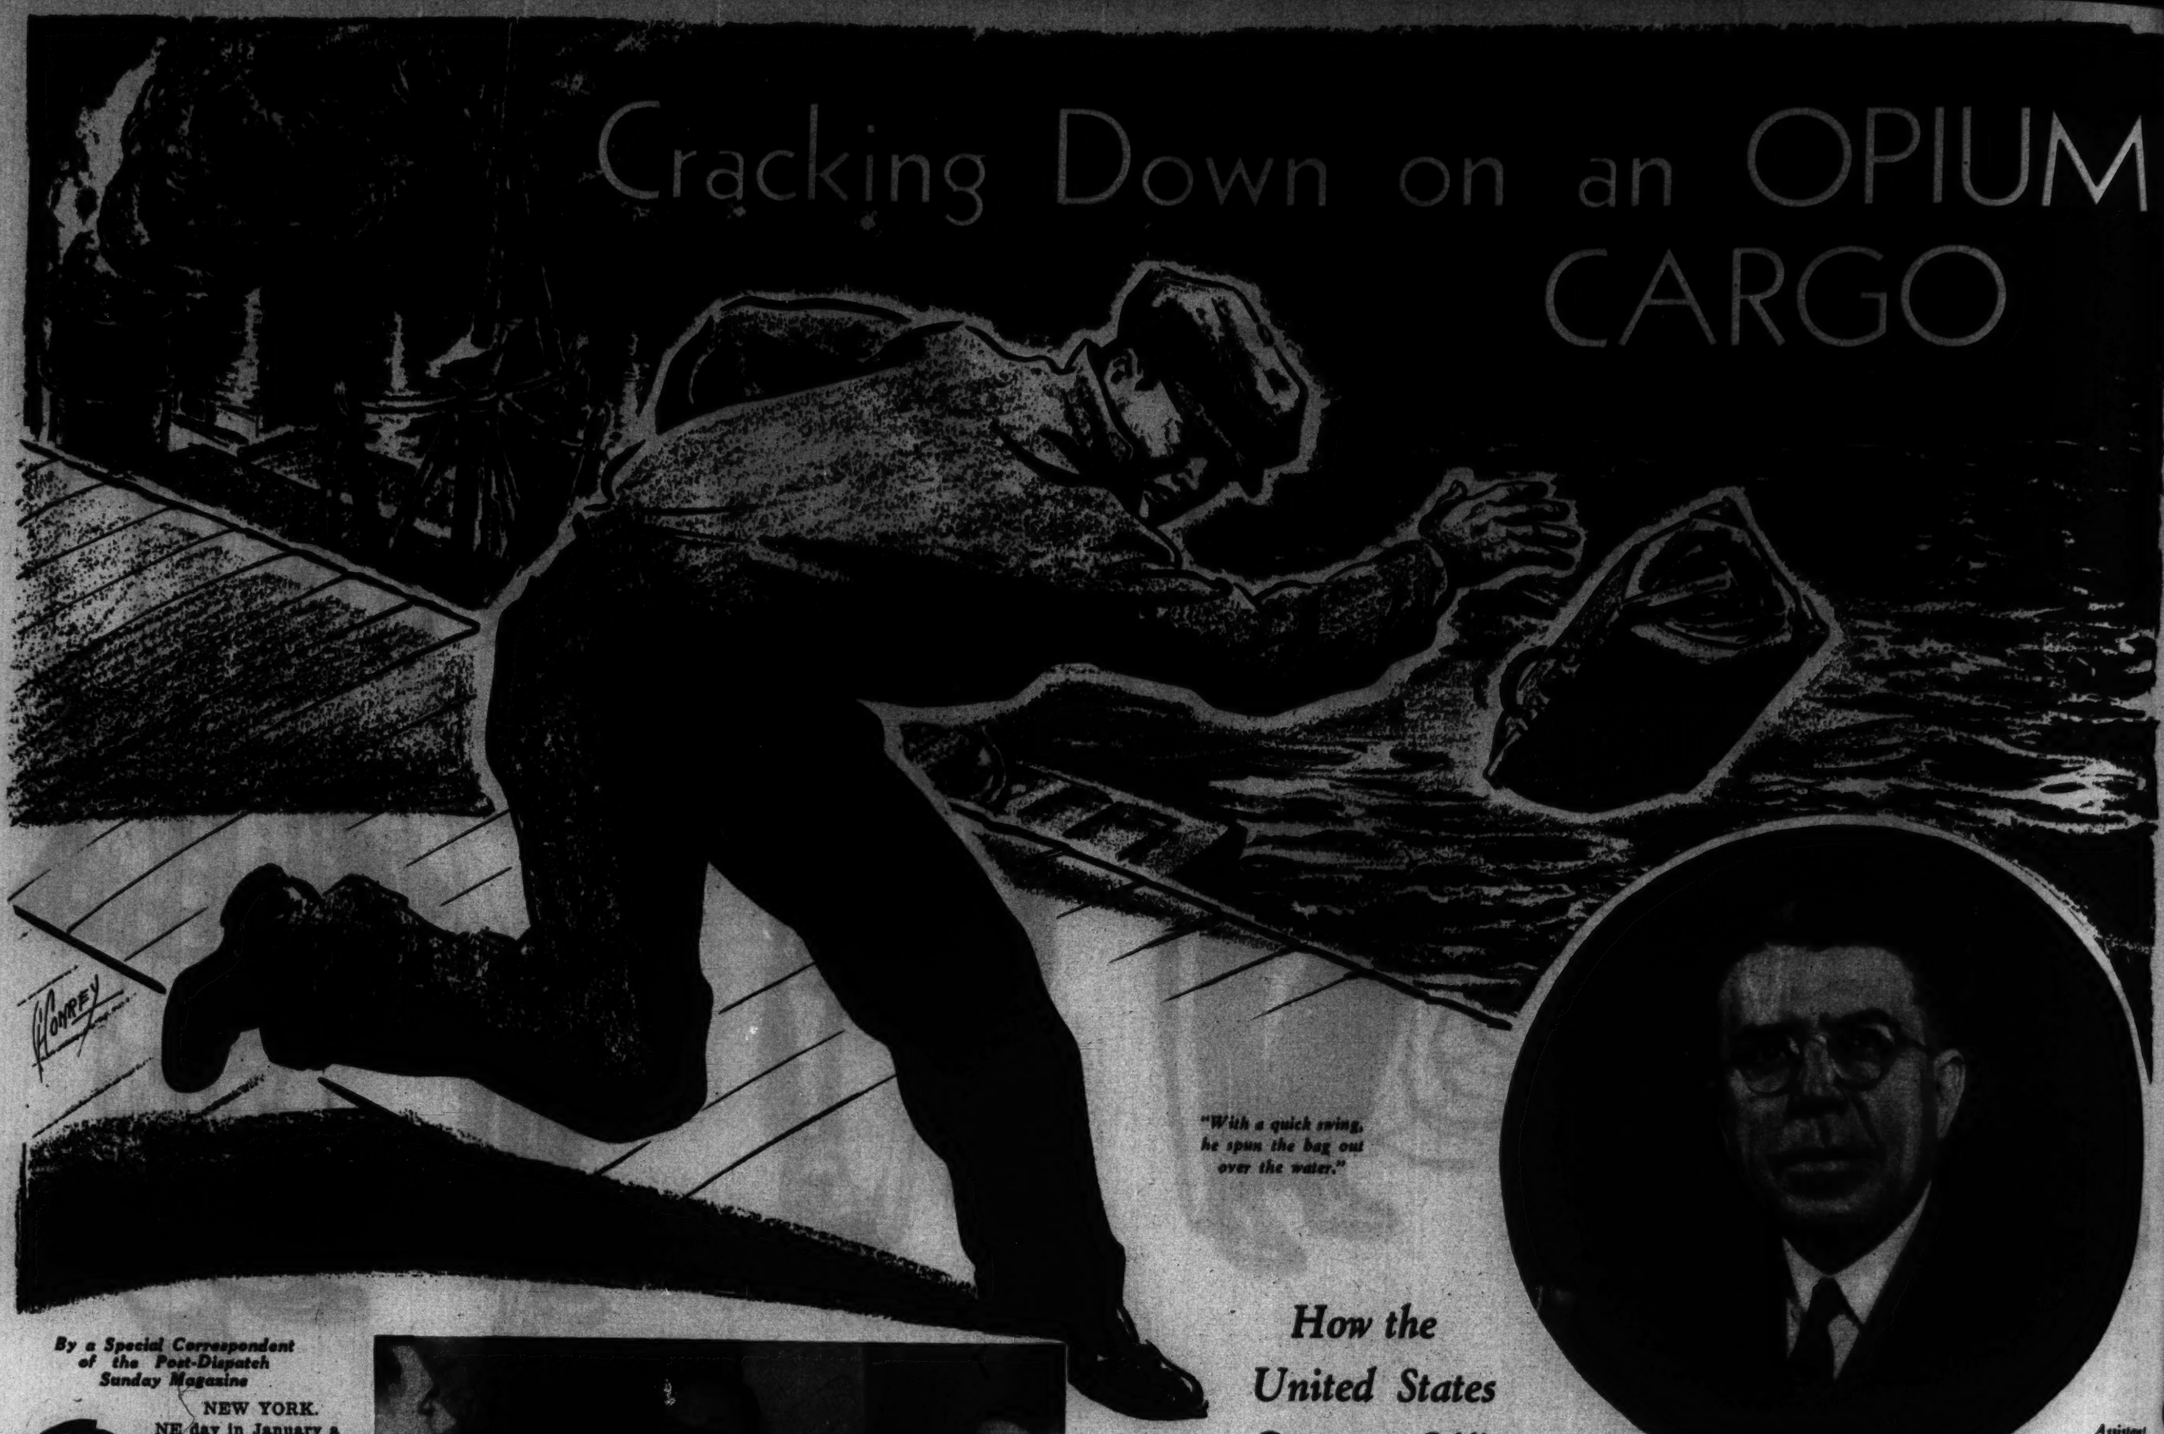
IN CASE the recruit should be interested in service in India, the troop ships are not the floating purgatories they used to be. A special air conditioning plant maintains an even temperature during the wintry gales in the Bay of Biscay and despite the torrid temperatures that hover about the equator. For the man who takes his wife and children, there are nurseries and playrooms aboard ship.

But despite all this tender treatment that borders on pampering, there was one British corporal who carried things a little too far and was reduced to the ranks on the very day that Cooper announced his new program in the House of Commons.

The corporal, one Arthur Preece of the First Worcestershire Regiment, was tried by court-martial because he served his men morning tea in bed for two cents daily. He pleaded guilty, explaining that "his first thought was for the men" who needed a hot drink, he asserted, before they arose and dressed in their unheated barracks. The profit, he declared, was negligible. The privates testified that they had good value for their money.

If this reveille tea serving had occurred in the days of Wellington, the Iron Duke, the corporal, in the opinion of some martinets, probably would have faced a firing squad for destroying military spirit. Since it occurred on the eve of the country club army program, he escaped with reduction to the ranks. Possibly, if the program works out well, he will be remembered and given rapid promotion.

Cracking Down on an OPIUM CARGO



"With a quick swing, he spun the bag out over the water."

Assistant Collector Gregory O'Keefe.

How the United States Customs Office Trailed $200,000 in Narcotics From Shanghai to New York.

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

NEW YORK.

ONE day in January a pale dirty white man, looking the part of an international bum, staggered through the doorway of a water front dive in the slums of Shanghai not far from the Bund and rolled perilously into the obliging arms of a well dressed passerby. The other caught him, steadied his shoulders, smiling affably, and after an instant's exchange inaudible an arm's length away the two men went their separate ways. The bum disappeared. The other man found his way to a telephone as quickly as possible, called for a special operator and put in a call to Assistant Collector Gregory O'Keefe, Customs Office, New York.

That is how it happened that when the motor ship Taybank, a cargo boat of the Bank Line hailing from Shanghai, pushed her stubby prow through the waters off Brooklyn almost three months later, her progress was observed by dozens of unseen eyes. A welcoming committee of customs agents scattered here and there on the water front also awaited her with subdued eagerness. Numerous citizens of New York who were believed to be interested in the Taybank's arrival had been shadowed for days and remained under the same close scrutiny as the ship.

What happens thereafter belongs to history—that sordid, yet at times hotly exciting history copiously filed away in the vaults of the Customs Office, the League of Nations Narcotics Control Bureau and the secret services of half the nations in the world.

The clank of the anchor cable as the Taybank hove to off the Fifty-eighth street pier the other day was the signal for starting the biggest raid in the history of American narcotics control. Biggest not from the point of view of the amount of contraband seized or the number of prisoners taken, but because a customs force more numerous than any ever known to have carried out a smuggling raid in New York participated in this one. In other respects the upshot of this concentrated three months' effort was somewhat disappointing. Only seven men were arrested for conspiracy to violate the Narcotics Act, after nearly two dozen suspects had been questioned. About $200,000 worth of opium (possibly it was worth as much as half a million) was confiscated. No big shots fell into the trap, nor were the higher agencies behind the attempted smuggling revealed. And when the tumult and the cross-questioning were over, all the Customs Office could announce with any assurance was that 600 cans of refined (and possibly much diluted) opium had been captured and that a link in a "major smuggling ring with world-wide activities" had been broken.

John Caputo.

To spend so much effort for so minute a gain in the war on dope traffic isn't much of a disappointment to Gregory O'Keefe, though. He is a veteran. Years of patience and experience dull the edge of disappointment as well as exultation for him. Year after year he saves the Government $7,000,000 in annual tariff revenues. In the present case he had gone in for rather elaborate preparations. To O'Keefe this is a customary routine.

WEEKS before the Taybank was due agents had been checking up on persons believed to be middlemen in the ring. The vessel would be refused clearance for the cargo she was to unload, so that the smugglers might have more time to work. At 8 o'clock on the morning of the raid agents were scattered everywhere in the vicinity. When a Syrian bookmaker named Willie Bonanzi put in an appearance, heading for a conspicuous spot on the pier, he was promptly arrested. An agent took his cap and leather jerkin, put them on and went out to the spot evidently selected as a rendezvous.

Probably this was a mistake in carrying out the painstakingly calculated orders from headquarters, for it had at first been planned to seize the smugglers in the act of transferring their cargo. Nevertheless the man who seemed to have arranged a meeting with Bonanzi, Dominic Butto, put in an appearance apparently according to schedule. He gave an unmistakable signal, received a reassuring answer from the agent wearing Bonanzi's clothes, and after counter-signaling, was likewise arrested. Some distance away, waiting in an obscure cove on the quayside near the foot of Sixteenth street, Brooklyn, other agents apprehended Tisio Buda, said to be Butto's younger brother despite the variance in their names, in charge of a frowsy junk boat powered with a high-speed well-conditioned gasoline engine.

A torn slip of paper on which a cryptic message in Chinese had been scrawled was found on Bonanzi. It proved to be an undeniable link in the smugglers' system of identification. For when the crew of the Taybank were surprised by a boarding party of 50 customs agents, a counterpart to the slip of paper found on Bonanzi was discovered concealed on the person of the ship's carpenter, 52-year-old Ah Nan.

The officers of the Taybank were not charged with any complicity in the smuggling attempt. Chief Officer R. R. C. Jones is reported to have given the customs agents every assistance. In the end only four members of the ship's polyglot crew were placed under arrest—Ah Nan, the carpenter; Kechil Hassen, the 76-year-old boatswain; the latter's son Omar Gani, the second boatswain; and Sainee Rasep, the young supercargo.

O'KEEFE, asked about details, was able to give little additional information. He had spent a good part of the day talking with a wealthy Chinese merchant, See Too, a New Yorker. The latter's dark, immobile face was expressionless as he sat in an outer office, hour after hour, pulling calmly at long black cigars. No one would explain why he was there or how he was connected with the case, but it was made very plain that he was not being held against his will, or at any rate that he wasn't under arrest. It was gathered from the interview with O'Keefe that he wasn't under any illusion as to whether or not the ring leaders of the opium syndicate were under arrest. The prisoners are all intermediaries. But the Customs Collector was apparently satisfied with the job and expected further consequences—possibly not for some time to come. He was surprised that so large a shipment should have been put through within such a short time after the smashing of the notorious Schatz-Caputo gang, said the present shipment may have been the first in a series sent over as feelers to indicate whether the American market could absorb additional opium during China's militant campaign against addiction to narcotics.

The reference to Schatz and Caputo whose elaborate machine for importation and distribution of dope was broken up only a few months ago brings up a characteristic phase of the narcotics problem in New York. For Morris Schatz, a veritable Al Capone in his unsavory field, had organized dope peddling on the principles of big business.

A shriveled little Rumanian suffering visibly from the effects of his own poisonous products, Morris Schatz was a fabulous criminal. Ugly and mean-looking he yet possessed a gift of persuasive language that enabled him to become a deadly menace to the integrity of ship's stewards and to aliens whose illegal entry into the United States gave him an additional hold over them. He had six unlisted phone numbers and six apartments. The various groups through whom he operated were split up so cleverly and broken into so many unconnected sections that the arrest of any detail scarcely affected the efficiency of the whole organization at all.

Among the aliens recruited by Schatz was a criminal named John, Jean or Gennero Caputo. Back in 1934, in a trial that all Paris watched with interest, John Caputo, a hot-headed Corsican, was sentenced for the murder of two men. The Judges of the Court of Assizes of Bouche-du-Rhone condemned him to the guillotine. Caputo strode out of court sneering. Not long before the date of his execution jailers found his cell empty. The French Surete sent circulars all over the world asking his apprehension.

Twelve years later in New York customs agents watching a liner noticed, as in the Taybank case, a junk boat slipping up to her late at night. Proceeding warily because Fred Seligman, a sailor who had given them information, had been murdered, they went aboard the ship and found a man crouching near the rail. He said he was John Caputo, that he had come aboard merely out of curiosity.

The customs agents had been working on a hunch. They simply wanted to determine whether narcotics came off the great liners not when they docked, but just before they were eased into the pier and tied up. Caputo as a captive meant nothing to them. But set free, he might lead them to the ring leaders they sought.

They gave him a stern warning against trespassing and he climbed rapidly down to his boat. From then on he lived under an X-ray. Every movement he made was recorded. One day he made a telephone call and when the wire was traced the agents identified his boss, Morris Schatz, for the first time. They did not arrest Schatz at that time. He, too, was put on the list of those under 24-hour-a-day surveillance since there was as yet no concrete evidence against the king.

AN INDICATION of the scale on which Schatz and Caputo operated was the fact that Schatz wired $30,000 a month to Europe to be placed to his credit, and the fact that he used only well-known ships in his plan — the Normandie of the French Line, the Manhattan of the United States Line, the New York of the North German Lloyd and the Ile de France of the French Line. On each he had stewards pledged to do his bidding—at a fat price.

On a chill evening in late fall the agents watching the liner New York saw a man racing along the roof of the pier carrying a traveling bag. A shot brought him up abruptly but, with a quick swing, he spun the bag out over the water. He admitted he was Fritz Meder, a member of the crew. When the bag was recovered it was found to contain 60 pounds of raw opium. A telephone number used by Meder was found to lead to another of Schatz's hideouts.

All the Schatz wires were tapped. It was learned in this way that a woman would try to bring drugs off the Ile de France. When the agents captured her she said her name was Margaret Georgeton. Four bricks of narcotics were found concealed on her person. The agents released her on the pretext they could not arrest her because she was on a foreign ship. She, too, telephoned Schatz when she reached shore.

One by one the ring members were picked up. Pierre Joliau, a buffet steward on the Ile de France, had a letter from Schatz in his possession. It protested the poor quality of drug sent by a Paris dealer. George Limacher and Henri Poncet, stewards on the Normandie, were arrested after they hid a stowaway on the ship with dope wrapped around his body. Otto Olsen and Stado Stadens were taken into custody as they lugged 115

SKETCHES FROM LIFE

High Lights on Unusual Personalities

DR. EDGAR B. HOWARD
JACOB J. CRESKOFF

Gave Up His Business—and Became a Leading Archeologist

PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania.

DURING the highly interesting and unique sessions of the International Symposium on Early Man and the Origins of the Human Race, which were held here a few days ago in conjunction with the celebration of the one hundred and twenty-fifth aniversary of the founding of the Academy of Natural Sciences, the oldest institution of its kind in the country, a tall, well-knit, slender man with graying hair was very much in evidence in the lecture halls and in the exhibit rooms.

He was seen conferring with foreign scientists like Dr. Pierre Teilhard de Chardin of China, Dr. Ralph von Koenigswald of Java, Dr. H. Broom of South Africa, Dr. Dorothy Garrod of England and Dr. Kas Birket-Smith of Denmark. He was busy arranging and rearranging the innumerable collections of skulls, bones and other relics by which experts in man's early history try to determine the age of man. And he was constantly consulting with the committee of the symposium, which consisted of such eminent men as Dr. John C. Merriam, president of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, D. C.; Dr. Edwin C. Conklin, vice-president of the academy and president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; Dr. George Grant MacCurdy, director of the American School of Pre-Historic Research, and Dr. Hellmut deTerra, research associate of the Carnegie Institution, assigned to the Academy of Natural Sciences in Philadelphia, for he himself was the secretary of the committee.

One of the interesting things about this busy man, Dr. Edgar B. Howard by name, is that although he is 50 years of age, he only recently, three years ago, received his degree of doctor of philosophy from the University of Pennsylvania. He has been actively connected with the Academy of Natural Sciences, of which he is today a trustee as well as acting curator of geology and paleontology, only three years. And he went on his first scientific expedition only eight years ago.

Edgar B. Howard was born in New Orleans in February, 1887. He went to St. Paul's School in Concord, New Hampshire, and then attended Yale University where he received his A. B. He took postgraduate work at the University of Pennsylvania and then went into business in Philadelphia, becoming head of a successful importing and exporting firm.

But somehow, from the very start, business did not appeal to Dr. Howard. During the war he served in France. On his return to this country, he went back into business again. But always there was one interest which was uppermost in his mind and one hobby which he always hoped would become his vocation. That was the study of geology and paleontology. He never let an opportunity slip by for accumulating information in these subjects. He kept on hoping that some day he would really break away completely from the business world and devote himself entirely to science.

That opportunity came about 10 years ago when Dr. Howard became connected with the museum of the University of Pennsylvania. Two years later he went on his first expedition to New Mexico as research associate of the Carnegie Institution. Since then he has practically given up all other interests and is devoting his entire time to geology and paleontology.

"It's not a new thing for me at all," said Dr. Howard. "As far back as I can remember, geology has fascinated me and I have been determined to make it my life work. When someone mentions business to me, it's all I can do to keep from shuddering. The very word makes me ill. I hope I have every vestige of it out of my system."

DR. HOWARD is particularly proud of the fact that last July the expedition which he led made a tremendously important discovery in New Mexico. A life-sized reproduction of the site at Clovis, New Mexico, where the find was made, is one of the most interesting exhibits in the Hall of Early Man of the Academy of Natural Sciences. It shows the teeth and bones of the 10,000-year-old American mammoth which the Howard party found in a pit buried under seven feet of gravel. What made the find particularly significant was that lodged in a vertebra of the mammoth's backbone was a stone spear point, which had been hurled at the gigantic animal by one of the "Folsom Men" who are believed by scientists to have roamed the Southwest thousands of years before the coming of the white man.

In telling of his work and the expedition to Clovis, Dr. Howard said:

"Perhaps one of the reasons I am so fascinated by this work, almost to the exclusion of everything else, is the fact that I feel that an archeologist may be said to be a cross between a sleuth and a ghoul. Although ghoul is not a very polite name to call anyone, nevertheless it is more or less appropriate.

"Last summer I organized some joint field work in New Mexico for the

Dr. Edgar B. Howard.

Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, the Carnegie Institution of Washington and the university museum of Philadelphia. While there I was invited to attend a barbecue given by a mining company in Carlsbad to its employes. During the course of the evening I had occasion to make reference to an archeologist as a sort of glorified ghoul.

"As the entertainment proceeded, a demonstration was given by some of the miners to show how a man overcome by mine gas should be resuscitated. While the supposed victim of the tragedy was having his arms manipulated by a large man who sat rather heavily on his back, some one of the audience called out: 'You had better look out, Bill, that the archeologist does not get you.' He was safe, however, for he was too recent a specimen to receive our attention.

"As a sleuth an archeologist must train his powers of observation, not to determine the bloodstains on clothing, nor the fingerprints on the window sill, but to pick up and follow clews left in the earth by man at a period when written history disappears dimly into the past.

"The question that seems to interest people most is how old a particular fossil specimen may be. The older it is, the better they like it. When you ask how long ago elephants lived in America, there are answers which range from the end of the last glacial period up to the time Columbus arrived. I do not mean to say that anyone's guess is as good as another's, but to say that science must advance by the trial and error method is nearer the truth.

"Many people refuse to believe that anything except circus elephants ever did live in America. I was almost inclined to agree with this myself, when, several years ago, we found the remains of a mammoth in what appeared to have been, at one time, some sort of soggy basin. The fact is that elephants did live in this country and were apparently one of the last of the ice age animals to die out.

"Another question people ask is how we know where to dig and, what is more important, how we know where to dig up something interesting. The answer is, of course, that we don't and that a great deal depends on chance. Often fossils, human or otherwise, are discovered accidentally by some local, non-professional prowler who reports his finds to a nearby school or drug store which in turn relays them to a museum or a college. Nine times out of 10 the result is a wild goose chase, but the tenth time interesting material may be found.

"For instance, a few years ago a road company was looking for a good place to secure some gravel. One of the places selected to dig test pits happened to be an old basin, forming a series of depressions between the towns of Portales and Clovis in Eastern New Mexico. In order to reach the gravel they had to go through from eight to 12 feet of silt and sand deposits. While they were scraping off these upper layers and piling them in dumps around the side of the pit, the workmen noticed great quantities of bones in the upper four feet.

"As a result, I made a hurried trip to the spot to make an investigation. I spent the following summer and several others since then trying to piece together the picture as it was several thousand years ago. This was the site of the excavations which my party worked on last summer.

"The gravel pit, after the company had ceased operations there, looked like a large layer cake. Extinct bison bones protruded along the face of the pit. Evidence that early hunters were there is plentiful, for they left scrapers, knives and spear points of stone and bone where they had killed the animals and feasted on their meat.

"In these same deposits were elephant bones and definite evidence that man must have hunted them, too. Nearby were two almost complete skeletons of those animals and under a vertebra, under a shoulder blade, between the joints of fore limbs and resting in close proximity to ribs and other vertebrae, we found several stone and bone spear points, scrapers and knives.

"Who the hunters were we do not know. We call them 'Folsom Men' because of the fact that the rather highly specialized types of spear points found with them are similar to those found near the little town of Folsom, New Mexico, about 10 years ago and have come to be known as Folsom points. We have, therefore, only the tools and weapons of stone and bone of these people, but the search goes on, and it will be a piece of great good luck to find the man himself—old man Folsom. Although geological studies place the age of the blue-gray deposits containing the Folsom points at about 12,000 years, to be safe we call it 8000 B. C. when these—our earliest Americans—inhabited the Southwest."

Dr. Howard is carrying on extensive study in the realm of early man. In the sciences of geology and paleontology, the study of the earth and the fossil records of early life found in the earth—the evidence of the ancestry of the human race—are slowly being pieced together. The mystery of the missing early men involves a world-wide hunt for clews—on the plains of China, in the mountains of India, in the desert of New Mexico and the Minnesota prairie.

TO FILL the need for a research center that would provide for bringing together all that is known of early man and stimulate work in this field is one of the objectives of the new educational development program at the Academy of Natural Sciences, where in the past century two members of the staff, Dr. Joseph Leidy and Dr. Edward D. Cope, assembled the pioneer collections of American paleontology.

There are now laboratories, studies and facilities essential to the operation of this department at the academy; eight colleges in Eastern Pennsylvania have indicated their desire to co-operate with and make use of the facilities of the department.

It was Dr. Edgar Howard who, active as a working scientist as well as a trustee, undertook the preparatory work for the department. Other excellent scientists have been assigned to work with him. What it needs now is support for a permanent staff of scientists and for expeditions.

Not long ago he went to Norway and to the Soviet Union to obtain in both countries correlation of his views from other scientists working in related fields.

MADELIN BLITZSTEIN.

Designer of 'EARTHQUAKE-PROOF' Buildings

WASHINGTON, D. C.

BACK in 1923, when the great Japanese earthquake disaster took the lives of 150,000 people and destroyed more than 60,000 buildings in Tokio, a young Philadelphian, only a year out of college, decided that the world badly needed an earthquake-tamer, and that he would do his best to fill the bill. He didn't think there was anything much that puny human beings could do to prevent the movement of mighty forces far underground that caused the surface of the earth to tremble. But it seemed to him that some of the horribly disastrous results of that trembling might be prevented—that ways should be found to lessen the earthquake's evil power, to keep it from inflicting such human suffering and economic waste as it often accomplished.

Today this man, Jacob J. Creskoff, is known to scientists and engineers as this country's leading aseismic designer. He's so busy as consultant to many of the departments of the United States Government on earthquake-proof buildings, or acting as engineer on earthquake-proof buildings which he has himself designed and built in Nevada, California and Kansas, that it's extremely difficult to locate him. While he and his wife make their home at the Hotel Montclair in New York City, he spends his time rushing around the country.

Born in the small town of Bels in Russia, in 1900, Creskoff was brought to this country by his father and mother in 1905. The Creskoffs settled in Philadelphia and there young Jacob went to grade and high schools, to Gratz College for a year and then to the University of Pennsylvania. Creskoff was graduated from the University's Towne Scientific School in 1922 with a degree of bachelor of science in civil engineering.

On graduation, the young engineer immediately got a job designing bridges and sewers for the city. This did not last long, however, for as soon as the full import of the Tokio disaster in 1923 struck him, he gave up his job of building bridges, went to Washington and managed to interest the proper Government authorities in his theories of anti-earthquake design.

Ever since then, he has spent all his time studying earthquakes from every possible angle; not only has he designed half a dozen veterans' hospitals from Maine to Kansas, several California postoffices and the new San Francisco mint, of which he is prouder perhaps than of any of his other efforts, but he has written a book on earthquakes, published three years ago. In that book he explains his theories of anti-earthquake design, theories which he himself was the first to make practicable and put into effect, thus revolutionising the entire field of earthquake-resistance.

"Though people do not realize the frequency of earthquakes because they seldom think about them until a sensational disaster occurs," Creskoff explained, "they really occur very often, averaging about one a week throughout the world. They cause 28,000 deaths, untold misery and millions of dollars of property damage anually.

"While violent earthquakes are as old as the earth, they will probably continue to occur as long as the earth exists. However, there is this important development: If knowledge now available to engineers and architects is applied in future design, major earthquakes, in time, will not have to continue to menace life and property seriously.

"The things which should be taken into account in order to appreciate the importance of the earthquake problem in our country as well as the fundamental principles of aseismic design are the distribution and frequency of destructive earthquakes in the United States, seismic genesis, the nature of the ground vibrations, their effect on structures, earthquake damage, aseismic design and the characteristics of reinforced concrete which make it particularly suitable for use in earthquake resistant construction.

Jacob J. Creskoff.

"While it is commonly believed that destructive earthquakes occur only in particular regions of this country, analysis of the earthquake history of the United States discloses that it is a mistake to assume that they are confined to a few localities. Also, a number of shocks are found to have occurred in regions where, from geological conditions, great earthquakes would not be expected. Again, sections long dormant have suddenly become active. All in all, it would be rash to predict immunity from earthquake damage for any region."

Creskoff has all the earthquake facts of our country right on his fingertips and spills them as easily as we do our ABC's. Up to December 31, 1936, there were exactly 136 earthquakes in our history, beginning with the earthquake of 1638 in Massachusetts, and including several in New York, one in New York City, several in New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Maine, Montana, Florida, and others in Virginia, Utah, Texas, South Carolina, Oregon and Nevada. California runs away with first place, registering 68, exactly one-half of all our earthquakes.

"Of the 136 recorded in the past three centuries," Creskoff says, "63 per cent occurred in the past 50 years. Perhaps this means that the seismicity or earthquake frequency of the United States is on the increase. Perhaps, and this seems the more logical conclusion, it merely means that the record for the first two and one-half centuries is an incomplete one.

"We may say that the probable frequency of destructive earthquakes in the United States was as follows: Potentially disastrous earthquakes—one in 10 years; earthquakes which damaged buildings severely—seven in 10 years; and shocks which caused structural damage—16 in 11 years.

"There is no doubt, of course, that destructive earthquakes are more frequent in some years than in others. They occur in more or less irregular cycles of activity. It appears that an active phase of the United States seismic cycle is now being approached. In fact, the indications are that this country will experience several important earthquakes between the years 1939 and 1946.

"The last statement is not a prediction. What I mean is that if I were to say, for example, that an earthquake damaging buildings severely would occur in the San Francisco area on July 4, 1937, that would be a prediction. Earthquake prediction, you see, if it is to be of value, should be specific as to time, place, and intensity. Thus, the statement that the next important seismic period in the United States will occur between 1939 and 1946 is not a prediction, but only a probability which we have deduced from statistical analysis of earthquakes in the country during the past three centuries and from other considerations. As such, it is presented to the engineers and architects merely to emphasize the importance of the earthquake problem in the United States.

"AS FOR earthquake genesis, according to modern theory, the earth consists of a molten core of nickel-iron 4350 miles in diameter, enveloped by several layers of dense materials 1750 miles thick, and covered by a 50-mile layer of rock known as its crust. The earth's crust is not solid, but is divided by innumerable planes of cleavage known as faults, into immense irregular blocks called fault blocks. Normally, the fault blocks are in equilibrium. Sometimes, however, the blocks become unbalanced and move with respect to each other. The motion is called slip and may be horizontal, vertical or both. If the slip is gradual, there may be no effect at the surface, but if it is abrupt, invisible elastic earth waves are propagated in all directions and the vibration caused by these waves in passing a point on the surface is known as an earthquake."

Until Creskoff came along with his earthquake design theories, most people thought that an earthquake's force was static; that is, a steady horizontal pressure. But Creskoff proved that an earthquake is dynamic and he created the dynamical theory of anti-earthquake design by taking into account not only pressure, but also earth movements, geologic formations, location and the normal vibration of buildings. His buildings are so designed that the normal rocking of the buildings is synchronised with earthquake vibrations.

"Buildings of a square or rectangular plan are in general damaged less than those of E, H, L or U plan," Creskoff continued. "One of the most frequent causes of collapse is an inadequate foundation. Buildings not anchored to their foundations suffer damage.

"Buildings so framed and braced that they vibrate as units with their foundations do well. Unbraced buildings collapse. Adjoining buildings hammer each other, but also tend to lend each other mutual support. Unanchored roof trusses slide off the walls.

"In building earthquake-proof buildings, it is important not to locate over a known fault. The dominant period of the site must be measured in order to permit the use of the correct synchronism factor; this dominant period can be obtained by measuring with seismographs the vibrations set up by traffic, by dynamite blasts, or by a shaking machine. It is good to use all three methods and check them against each other for accuracy. All three were used on the site of the San Francisco mint.

"The United States Coast and Geodetic Survey has measured the periods of more than 200 buildings in California. It is intended to remeasure these periods after the buildings have been shaken by a major earthquake, thus getting a mechanical check on the structural conditions of the buildings."

The Chance Meeting That Led to the Navy Spy's Capture

Former Lieutenant-Commander John S. Farnsworth.

"Espionage agents worked late into the night."

Commander Yosiyuki Itimiya.

Cashiered From the Service, John Farnsworth Sold His Knowledge to a Foreign Power — Then Ran Afoul of the United States Naval Intelligence.

By JAMES W. BOOTH
A Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

WASHINGTON.

A SLEEK automobile, with a slender Japanese at the wheel, swung slowly around Chevy Chase Circle, at the boundary between the District of Columbia and Maryland. Twice it went leisurely around, as though the driver was debating which of the roads, leading off like spokes from a hub, he should follow.

And then, as the car commenced its third swing, a man stepped briskly from the curb. He wasn't a Japanese. He was an American, with alert military bearing, iron-gray hair and a natty waxed mustache. The car slowed down and the door swung open. The American slipped in beside the driver. The car sprang ahead, shot out of the circle, and went speeding into Maryland.

Later, behind locked doors of three communicating apartments in a fashionable building high above the Nation's Capital, Japanese espionage agents worked late into the night before photostat machines—copying valuable United States documents and secrets.

John S. Farnsworth, cashiered Lieutenant-Commander of the United States Navy, had betrayed the country whose uniform he once wore for a pot of Oriental gold.

With the world spending billions for armaments and nations seeking to learn all they can about the military and naval preparations of other nations, the United States has been fortunately free of the spy hysteria which has swept Europe and the Orient. The Farnsworth case, recently closed in Washington, with the sentencing of the former Naval officer to from four to 12 years in the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary for conspiring with two former assistant Japanese naval attaches to communicate American defense secrets to that nation, is the second in the peace-time history of the United States Navy. Named as co-conspirators with Farnsworth were the two former assistant Japanese naval attaches, Commander Yosiyuki Itimiya and Commander Akira Yamaki. But they were safely back in the land of the Cherry Blossoms when United States Naval Intelligence closed down on the one-time Lieutenant-Commander and wrecked the conspiracy.

Farnsworth had served their purpose. He could be thrown to the wolves. In peace time, it is invariably the fate of spies. Once they have delivered, they are cast adrift. In war time, espionage is carried on by great patriots—an Edith Cavell, a Major Andre, a Nathan Hale. In peace time the work is less heroic. It operates through adventurers and shady characters who need money.

Farnsworth needed money. Dismissed from the Navy in 1927 for violation of regulations and perjury, 1933 found him in Cincinnati — 40 years old, his life wrecked on the shoals of his own misconduct. His record stood against him. He could not get a job.

Then, with 16 years of life devoted to national defense and with an inside knowledge of naval affairs, he offered his services to America's principal naval rival in the Pacific. In a letter to the Japanese Embassy at Washington, he outlined his record and suggested that he be employed as a "naval advisor." His offer was accepted.

The aircraft carrier Saratoga.

Instructions were sent to Farnsworth to come to Washington. He came, but not under his right name. Instead, he registered at the Hotel Willard as "P. J. Quigley, Coronado-San Diego, California." Shortly after he checked in he received a telephone message, and that night he met Commander Yosiyuki Itimiya, newly appointed assistant naval attache of the Japanese Embassy. That was in 1934.

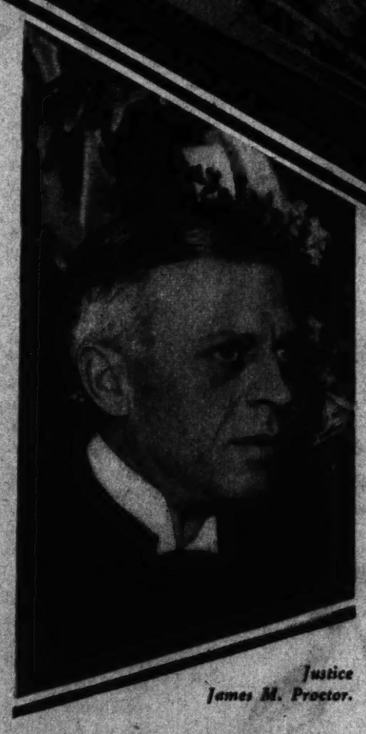
They talked, and, according to the records of Assistant United States Attorney Samuel F. Beach, Farnsworth received $3000 in cash, the promise of $500 a week and expenses, and agreed to go to work for the Nipponese—but not as a "naval advisor."

Having been a brilliant naval engineer in the service, Farnsworth needed only a hasty examination of confidential plans to be able later to trace them from memory. It was this brilliance that sold him to the Japanese, and enabled him to betray naval secrets.

INTO the hands of Japan, because of his traitorous conduct, went plans and performance records of the airplane carriers Ranger and Saratoga, minute data on the effectiveness of guns on battleships of the American fleet, and knowledge of confidential codes and signals of the Navy.

But the information now is largely useless. For a far-reaching revision of the American Navy's fleet tactics has been effected, and at the Naval War College, at Newport, Rhode Island, new courses have been prepared and confidential code books and signals entirely changed.

The story of how United States Naval Intelligence—which was headed by Captain William D. Puleston—uncovered Farnsworth's activities was not unfolded in court when Farnsworth was brought to trial in mid-February, for the spy entered a plea of nolo contendere. But the thrilling details of this contest between espionage and counter-espionage are to be found in the office of Assistant United States Attorney Beach in a cardboard box filled with records of telephone calls made by Farnsworth to his Japanese employers, and in stacked letter-size manila envelopes containing the sworn statements of 57 witnesses, who had been summoned to appear against the man who sold naval secrets of his native land.



Justice James M. Proctor.

There were typical elements of international intrigue in the case. Two rooms in the apartment where the assistant naval attaches maintained quarters were always kept locked. Behind the bolted doors were the photostat machines, for the copying of American naval documents and secrets. So closely were they guarded that not even chambermaids, repair men and other employes of the building were allowed to enter and perform their accustomed duties.

Three unlisted telephones ran into the apartment. Farnsworth always used one of them when he communicated with those to whom he was selling information, and all conversations were in code. It was "Morgan speaking" when the cashiered naval officer called up. And an agreement to meet "at the club" meant that one of the Japanese would pick him up at Chevy Chase Circle.

All payments were made in $100 bills. No books were kept. Farnsworth had no bank account. Great pains were taken to keep the conspiracy under cover.

New York, Philadelphia and Washington saw a lot of Farnsworth during the two years which followed his initial meeting with Commander Yosiyuki Itimiya. And he was a frequent visitor, too, at Annapolis, where he still had acquaintances. One day he would turn up at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. The next day he would be seen around the Philadelphia Navy Yard. A few days later he would appear at the Navy Department at Washington. He said he had turned to writing, and was doing a series of naval articles for a magazine. It didn't arouse suspicion—at first.

NOR did anyone think it unusual when he commenced dropping in on naval officers at their homes—classmates of his at Annapolis and men who had served with him on battleships and in naval aviation. On these occasions talk usually turned to fleet maneuvers, to matters of national defense, to ship construction. If such subjects didn't come up naturally, Farnsworth managed to bring the conversation around to them.

His fellow conspirators wanted the highly confidential naval book "The Service of Information and Security." It is a volume on tactics and contains confidential instruction on the scouting of airplanes and airplane carriers, and the disposition and maneuvering of ships. Written in 1916 by Rear Admiral William S. Pye, it was supposed to be obsolete. Actually, it wasn't. The book is still in use. It has been revised several times, and is a registered document. Any naval officer may obtain it, but he must sign for it.

Farnsworth was no longer a naval officer. Not only that, but he had been cashiered from the service. Still, the book found its way into the mysterious rooms of the Japanese which were always kept locked and barred to outsiders.

It was copied—every paragraph, every drawing—and the following morning it was back in an Ensign's house, at Annapolis, where Farnsworth had secretly obtained it.

It did not take the Navy long to become suspicious. Naval documents had a habit of disappearing when he showed up at Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Washington and elsewhere. There wasn't any definite proof that he had taken then, but Naval Intelligence quietly went into action, nevertheless.

There came a day when Captain Puleston was driving down from the Chevy Chase Country Club after a round of golf.

At the circle his alert eyes noticed the sleek automobile swing slowly around, and particularly he noticed the slender Japanese at the wheel. He saw the car make one swing and then start on another. He wondered about it. And then his pulse quickened, for he glimpsed the man with military bearing, iron gray hair and natty waxed mustache swing nimbly into the car. When the sleek automobile swung out of the circle and went speeding into Maryland, Puleston followed.

Shortly afterward a confidential letter went out from the Navy Department, warning all officers not to give Farnsworth any information. It just about ended his usefulness to Japan, and early in 1936 the naval attaches discontinued his regular salary. They had heard of the Navy's action. Those things get around.

Thereafter payments were irregular. The cash still came in $100 bills, but less frequently than before. The going became rough for the former Lieutenant-Commander. And, although he was unaware of it, both Naval Intelligence and the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice were closing in on him.

Naval Intelligence learned how he obtained the confidential "Service of Information and Security." It ascertained how plans and performance records of the airplane carriers Saratoga and Ranger had become available to Japan through his efforts. It fashioned a closely knit web of evidence about him.

The G-men aided in the fashioning. They traced telephone calls he had made over the unlisted lines running into the headquarters of the Japanese espionage agents. They traced them from his $110-a-month apartment in Washington, and from hotels in New York, Philadelphia and elsewhere. They found that he had registered under the names of "Morgan," "Quigley" and "Bennett," never under his own name.

They found a housemaid who had worked in the apartment house where the Japanese had quarters and had been assigned to the fourth floor, on which their rooms were situated. From her they learned of the two locked rooms across the threshold of which no one stepped but those in the service of the Japanese Emperor.

The jig was up for the man who had betrayed the country whose uniform he had once worn. The stern hand of the Department of Justice came down upon him. His brisk, military bearing gone, he became a trembling figure on the verge of nervous collapse. For a time after his arrest, in Washington, he tried to bluff it out. But finally, when he saw how futile it was to continue to deny his guilt, he simply gave up.

SIX months of careful preparation on the part of the Government preceded the day when he was called to trial. Thirty-six-year-old Assistant United States Attorney Beach, in charge of the prosecution, had devoted days and nights to the work of patching up every loophole through which he might escape. Naval Intelligence had summoned officers to Washington from all parts of the country and from the high seas. Fifty-seven witnesses were ready to take the stand and testify against the former Lieutenant-Commander. And there were depositions from others, some of them taken thousands of miles away.

But when the case was called, in a Federal courtroom packed with thrill seekers, who expected to hear all about the methods of international espionage, Farnsworth raised the white flag. There was no fight left in him.

"This was such a plot as is abhorrent to every good citizen," declared Justice James M. Proctor in sentencing him. "This was a continuous and persistent plot cleverly carried on by you and emissaries of a foreign country masquerading under diplomatic guise and hiding behind diplomatic immunity.

"Through deception, stealth, thievery and imposition on your friends in the naval service you succeeded in obtaining confidential information and delivering it to those emissaries for money.

"If we had been at war, your act would have been treason and punishable by the severest penalty. It seems to me that the duty rests upon the court in a case of this sort to impose such a sentence as will be deterrent to others—so that others, tempted as you have been, to sell out their country, will consider your condemnation and degradation before doing so."

AIR RACE and PLAY AIRPORT

By WALTER DAHLGREN

DIRECTIONS ● Mount the field and the top on cardboard, mount other parts on heavy Manila paper. Cut out, fold on dotted lines and paste (stars indicate paste) parts together. Insert the three tabs on bottom of hangar into slits A, B and C and paste. The pylons are inserted into squares and the tabs pasted to underside. Have Dad whittle a spindle about 1½ inches long. Push about one-half inch of this through the center of top. RULES ● Two play. Start with the planes in hangar. To get out you must spin a "5"—thereafter you move as many spaces forward as indicated by the number you spin. When landing on "MOTOR LOOSE" or "CRASHED" you must return to hangar and restart. If the other plane occupies the space you are to land on, that plane is moved back one space. Three laps around and back into the hangar is a game.

STONE RELIC Found in Kansas May Have ANTEDATED COLUMBUS

Reproduction of an old painting showing a battle between Swedes and Danes. The round shields and swords and coats of mail are similar to those on the marble cylinder.

Carved Figures on Cylinder Presumably of Italian Origin and Suggest Thirteenth Century or Earlier Workmanship.

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

LOS ANGELES, California.

YEAR after year discovery of extremely primitive European remains in various widely scattered parts of America claims Columbus' claims as original discoverer of the continent. His historical importance is still being certified by the settlement of the Americas. In that respect his journeys were of crucial moment. But from the point of view of vicarious voyagers primarily concerned with the heroic quality of an adventure and the imagined ecstacy of trespassing on shore lines that had retained their primitive privacy from creation onward till the moment of discovery, Columbus may be very small potatoes.

Photo of broken marble cylinder fragment found in Kansas and believed to have originated in Europe before the discovery of America.

Those mysterious Norse voyagers, whose excursions into an unknown primeval wilderness remain inexplicable as to motive and equally inexplicable as to outcome, are far more suggestive figures. No one can write their story, or will be able to for years to come. Fresh evidence still crops up, unexpectedly and sporadically. Every time a new clew to the mystery of their purpose, their experiences and their final ending does come to light, one is tempted to wonder how many other marvelous links have fallen into reckless or unsympathetic hands, and so been lost, perhaps forever. The present story has a special appeal of that sort.

A highly provocative new find was made 16 months ago, six feet below the sod near Wichita, Kansas. The discoverer was a building contractor in Wichita, named Jack Harts. Soon afterwards he set out for California and at the last moment decided to to keep the relic for luck. So he chucked it carelessly into the back seat of his car and drove off, some 2000 miles across the plains and mountains. The other day he handed what he took to be a trivial bit of stone to a curator of the Los Angeles Museum, Dr. Victor Merlo. And that is how one of the most suggestive bits of prehistoric legend yet unearthed became the property of the world, though Jack Harts still retains title to the piece itself.

The fragment is a cylinder an inch and three-quarters in diameter, four and a half inches long. Its material is variously described as porphyry and as red marble. At any rate it is said to be of a stone not quarried in America. Its smooth surface is etched with a spiral pictograph, part of which was destroyed at the point where the cylinder was broken off. So far it is impossible to guess how much of the story has been lost. The story itself hasn't yet been fully deciphered. But the Los Angeles Museum experts have concluded tentatively that the carvings originated in Europe in the thirteenth century or earlier.

THE accompanying illustrations give a pretty fair idea of the character of the etching. It is certainly not Indian in origin. The figures of horses indicate that Indians could have had nothing to do with it, for there were no horses in America at the time the carving was made. Nor are there any characteristics of the style of carving that permit of the possibility that it originated in an Indian culture. As said before, the material itself did not originate in America.

Dr. Merlo draws the following implications from his inspection of the cylinder. The marble (or porphyry) is presumably of Italian origin. The symbolism seems to be of Masonic derivation, indicating a possible connection with the Knights Templar. The fragment is genuine and there is no possibility of the discovery being a hoax. There are traces of cement at the base of the fragment, which is largely intact, indicating that it may have been held in an upright position and may have been used ceremonially.

"A processional scene is carved spirally about the length of the cylinder," Dr. Merlo says in his analysis. "We see galleys conveying armed men, men crossing bridges and battlements, and fortified gates. There appears to be a throne, a banqueting scene, palm trees and other features that correspond with the chronicles of the Crusades. At the beginning of the spiral is a large bird. If it actually represents an arched branch and a bird, as it seems to, we have here two typical Masonic symbols—the branch of thorns and the pelican plucking its breast to feed its young."

Dr. Merlo seems to have two conclusions to suggest. The pictographs remind him of the fable of Prince Madoc of Wales, who was supposed to have visited a country to the southwest of Greenland accompanied by a band of Scottish and Welsh tribesmen, about 1170 A. D. This voyage of 10 ships has already been a subject for much conjecture. Another that Dr. Merlo considers to have a possible connection with the pictograph is the tale of the voyage of Sigurd in 1110 A. D. This Danish king brought 10,000

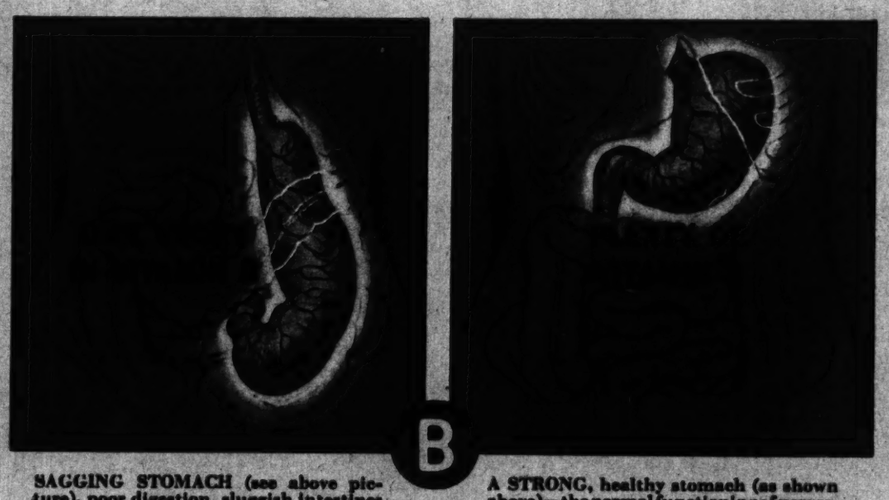
Many Diets Short In Vitamins

Few People Realize Whether Their Meals Are Undersupplied with Vitamins —Until Ill Health Shows It

But, by Adding ONE FOOD to Your Regular Diet, You Can Be Sure of A REGULAR SUPPLY Of These 4 VITAMINS Every Day



SAGGING STOMACH (see above picture), poor digestion, sluggish intestines and many obscure nervous troubles can result from too little Vitamin B—the NERVE VITAMIN.

A STRONG, healthy stomach (as shown above)—the normal functioning of nerves, intestines and bowels—all require ample Vitamin B—the NERVE VITAMIN—each day. Add Fleischmann's Yeast to your regular diet to increase your supply of Vitamin B. It is one of the richest natural food sources of this NERVE VITAMIN.

UNDERNOURISHED, thin, poorly developed children often fail to get enough Vitamin G—the GROWTH VITAMIN—in their diet. Rapidly growing boys and girls should have a generous supply of this essential vitamin to help in building up a sturdy, well-developed body and general good health. Fleischmann's Yeast is rich in Vitamin G. Children from 5 to 12 years can be given 1 to 2 cakes daily.

Undersupplied with Vitamin D — Well supplied with Vitamin D

HERMAN BRIX

Well-known Shot-Put Champion—has the sturdy body and vigorous strength that show he is well supplied with these 4 essential vitamins—A, B, D and G.

MANY PEOPLE today suffer from some degree of vitamin deficiency, because their meals do not provide enough of these health-building food elements.

A shortage of even one of these important food elements can undermine your vitality and lower your resistance to disease.

The addition of just one food—FLEISCHMANN'S fresh YEAST—helps to increase your supply of these vitamins. It assures you an EXTRA daily quota of 4 important vitamins—A, B, D and G—over and above what your ordinary meals provide.

No other one natural food gives you such a rich supply of these 4 combined vitamins.

Just eat 3 cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast daily—one cake about ½ hour before each meal. Eat it plain, or dissolved in a little water. Start now to build up your vitamin health. Order 2 or 3 days' supply at a time from your grocer. Fleischmann's Yeast keeps perfectly in the icebox.

A

NOT ENOUGH VITAMIN A

threw up his position, abandoned his career and his family, and set off for Berlin.

Irmgard was embarrassed by his attentions and their running warfare became a scandal. They were put out of a hotel for noisy quarreling. And when Irmgard's fortune dwindled to nothing during the inflation, she shamelessly passed rubber checks and made Major Benh make them good. After a year of this Benh became insane when Irmgard took up with a popular novelist, Walther Krans.

Kranz's story was pretty much like all the others. He fell. He was encouraged. A wedding date was set. And when a friend called him up the evening before he was to be married to Irmgard, telling him that she was spending the evening at a night club with his closest and most obnoxious rival, the writer followed her, threw a glass at his fiancee's escort and began a fight with bottles and chairs that landed them both in hospital.

Krans at least escaped with his life and his sanity. Her next victim, a retired colonel who invited her to visit him at his estate in Mecklenburg, committed suicide when he discovered her making love on successive evenings to his two young nephews.

FROM Mecklenberg she went to Budapest. She was hard up by this time and after a few weeks of an affair with a young Hungarian medical student, both were arrested for passing bad checks and cheating various hotels. The boy was given a suspended sentence. Irmgard went to jail for two months not only on the bad check charge, but also for "leading a youngster into dishonesty."

She repeated this escapade with a young high school teacher, whom she persuaded to leave a fiancee and his job. This time she was sentenced to two years in the penitentiary. She didn't stay there long. The warden of the prison became enamoured of her, took pity on her and allowed her to escape. He was charged with willful negligence, tried, and sentenced to two years in his own prison.

Irmgard was captured almost immediately and tried last January on a fugitive charge. This time the prosecutor made a detailed examination of her past. He showed how many wrecked lives and suicides she had left in her wake. The Judge who heard the case against her was impressed. He asked her what had been her motive. She was perfectly frank about it. She told of her conscious emulation of Countess Tarnowska and explained her reasons for hating mankind. She told her story as movingly as she knew how, but her Judge was a man of stone. He hated everything she stood for and remained cold to her explanations and her excuses. In the end he sentenced her to nine years in prison. Since she had hung up a record even more terrible than Countess Tarnowska's, she could stand a harder punishment.

She has just gone to prison. If she lives out her term, Irmgard will be close to 50 when she is released.

Meanwhile the ring was tightening about Schatz and Caputo. The French fugitive was the first to be taken. He did not fall into a trap set for him at a water front restaurant—a trap that almost cost the life of an innocent man. Assistant United States Attorney Joseph Martin had given the agents orders that they were to fire if Caputo tried any rough stuff when he went up to him. As he walked into the restaurant with the agents lagging behind ready for any eventuality a friend rushed up to Martin and began pummeling him good-naturedly.

Martin just managed to signal before his friend's cordiality turned him into a clay pigeon. The detectives left the restaurant and were walking back to headquarters when they saw Caputo sitting in an automobile in front of the State Supreme Court Building. He surrendered peaceably, scoffing at the possibility he might be extradited to France. In the police lineup he denied both the narcotics and the fugitive-from-justice charges.

"I have never been in France," he said.

The police official conducting the lineup asked him to explain several tattoos in French found on his body.

"I had that tattooing done here," he said.

"Why was it done in French?"

"Oh, I just had some French friends and I got the idea from them."

He said he was born in San Francisco a little while before the fire that destroyed most of the vital statistics records—a favorite birthplace for criminals. He was turned over to Federal authorities on a request from the French Ambassador, who asked for extradition under the treaty between the United States and France.

SCHATZ was packed and ready to leave when he was arrested. He got 25 years and a fine of $25,000. The heaviest sentence of all went surprisingly to Pier de Stefano, one of his chief lieutenants, who got 40 years and a $40,000 fine. Olsen and Stadens were sentenced to 10 years each; Limacher to five years and a $500 fine, Poncet to the same, Jollau to three years and a $500 fine.

Caputo was not sentenced because of the prior claim of France. Mrs. Georgeton and others who turned informer got suspended sentences.

And that was the end of the Schatz-Caputo ring. It was a great feather in the cap of the Customs Office. But it was far from conclusive. For everyone concerned is aware that the only way to end the opium racket is to stop it up at its source.

of his vassals to Italy in a fleet of dragon-prowed ships, and sailed from there to the Crusades to break the siege of Acre and relieve Baldwin, King of Jerusalem.

It is conceivable that the cylinder, if of Italian origin, was given to some Danish chief by an Italian Templar and that it was carried to America on an unchronicled subsequent voyage.

Coronado, Onate, De Soto and La Salle, early explorers of the Mississippi Valley, some of whom came as far west as Kansas, are said to have described traces of a European racial strain among the Indians of this region. It is said that certain early settlers also noticed that some of the Indians they encountered had blue eyes and Caucasian features, some of them being of greater height than was ordinary among the plains Indians. There was some evidence of Christian elements in the ritual of these tribes. Most significantly, it is said that ethnologists and philologists have discovered traces of Welsh in certain Kansas Indian dialects.

For the time being the cylinder's derivation, however suggestive a subject, remains moot.

LONDON, England.

A TOUR of Great Britain and Ireland between breakfast and tea time the other day created a stir in aviation circles as well as appealing to the imagination of the earth-bound. Not because the speed attained in the trip was unprecedented or because unique technical difficulties were surmounted; man has traveled faster and has often faced greater obstacles. The interest aroused by this tour was occasioned by the fact that this was an experimental flight of the Cambria, one of the big flying boats designed to blaze the way for regular airplane commercial service between Europe and North America. And the success of this non-stop circling of the British Isles—the beautiful behavior of the huge ship—seemed to bring nearer the long-dreamed-of day when mail and freight and passengers will be transported by such craft across the North Atlantic.

The Cambria, 20-ton, four-engined flying boat owned by Imperial Airways, took to the air at Southampton at 8:05 a. m. Twenty-six minutes later it was over London, and an hour after that it passed over Yarmouth. Up the east coast the great ship flew, through bright and pleasant skies. Above the principal cities the Cambria circled in order that the crowds squinting upward might have a longer look.

Across the Scottish border, Edinburgh and Glasgow peered through fog and clouds at the touring plane. Then the Cambria crossed a stretch of water and the eastern coast of Ireland was below, pounded by rain. Above Belfast and Dublin the ship circled, then again across the Irish Sea to pass over St. David's Head and Swansea, in Wales, and so back to England. The circuit was completed with arrival at Southampton at 4:55 p. m. In less than nine hours the Imperial Airways flying boat had traveled some 1350 miles — making an average speed of about 150 miles an hour.

Throughout the tour the Cambria was in constant radio communication with the ground, and its navigator always knew just where it was, even when it encountered bad weather. Most of the time it maintained a height of 2000 to 2500 feet. The ship went up with 1600 gallons of fuel, and when it came down there was enough fuel left to keep it going for three or four hours more.

Commanding the airplane was Captain G. J. Powell. With him were six other men, including Squadron Leader E. H. T. Spence of the Air Ministry.

Of first importance was the fact that this aircraft designed for pioneering over the North Atlantic is reported to have done the job it was supposed to do on this tour—to have done everything expected of it—performed efficiently. Said Captain Powell happily, "The Cambria behaved like a perfect lady." Such performance is of course essential for a trans-Atlantic service.

The Caledonia, sister ship of the Cambria and also designed for pioneering in the trans-Atlantic service, has likewise met its tests superbly, having recently made a 2300-mile, non-stop flight from England to Alexandria, Egypt.

THESE flying boats are part of an order of 28 which Short Brothers have been turning out for Imperial Airways at Rochester. The "Empire" flying boats, as they are called, are monoplanes, of metal construction, with two-deck hull, the lower part of which is for passengers. They are powered with four Bristol "Pegasus" engines, each capable of developing 900 horsepower. The ships are 88 feet long, with a wing span of 114 feet and a weight, loaded, of 20 tons. The maximum speed is 200 miles an hour and the cruising speed about 160. The minimum flying speed is 69 miles an hour. Twenty-four passengers can be carried in daytime flights; there are sleeping accommodations for 16.

The interior arrangement combines comfort with economical use of space. In the nose is a mooring compartment. Just behind this, on the lower deck, is a smoking cabin with seats for seven persons. Behind this are a buffet and lavatories. Then come a midship cabin, where three persons may sit, a promenade cabin, with room for eight passengers, and an after cabin seating six passengers. In each of the cabins four persons can sleep. The chairs are adjustable so that they can be turned or the backs inclined at any angle desired, and there are tables for all the seats. There is a wall light for each passenger in addition to the dome lights in the ceiling. Comfortable temperature is assured by air conditioning.

On the upper deck, at the front, is the pilot's compartment, where the captain and first officer sit side by side at dual controls. Behind this are places for the radio operator, the navigator and the engineer. Mail is carried in a compartment on the upper deck and there is space there for keeping bedding during the day. Baggage is stowed away in a compartment behind the after cabin.

It is expected that the Cambria and the Caledonia, which have been specially equipped to carry large supplies of fuel, will begin experimental flights across the North Atlantic this summer, the crossing being between Ireland and Newfoundland. Extensive tests are being made with new radio station whose function it will be to help the planes keep to the right course during the passage.

An American company, the Pan-American Airways System, is planning to co-operate with Imperial Airways in the trans-Atlantic service. Arrangements are being made for the route between Ireland and Newfoundland to be used for half the year—this trip would require about 24 hours—while for the other six months the flying boats would take a southern—and longer—route, by way of Bermuda. There is some expectation that mail service will be in operation by the end of this year.

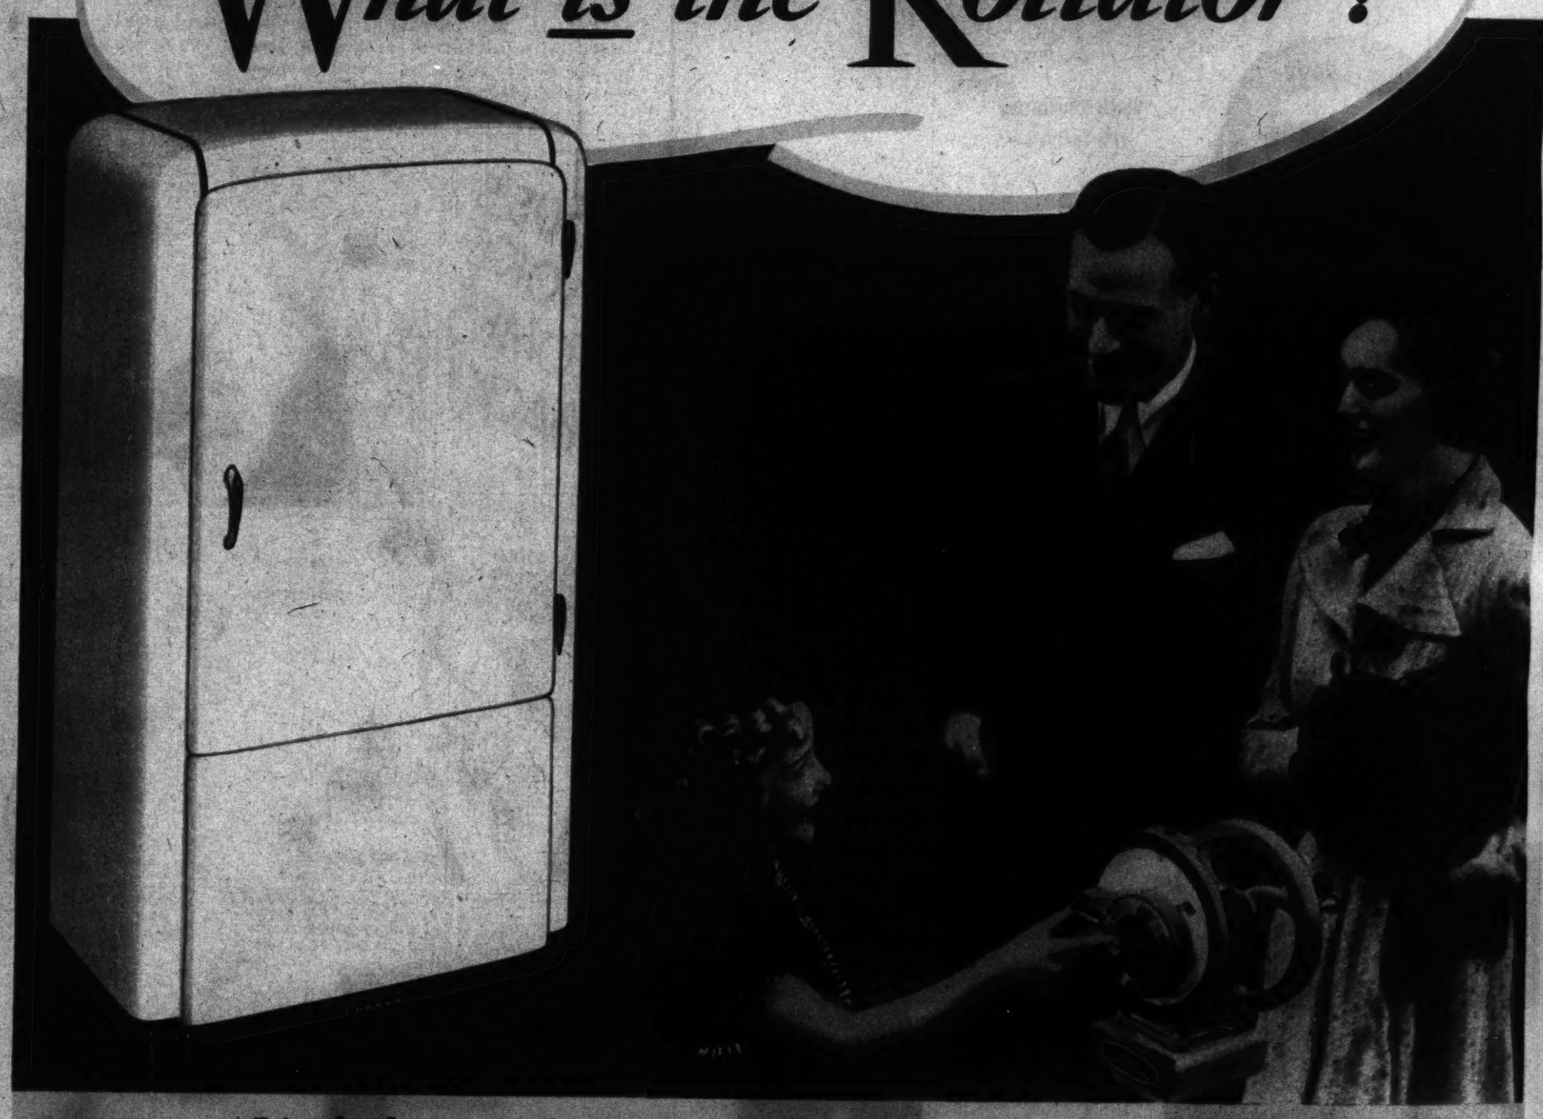
"What is the Rollator?"



"It's the heart of the Norge Refrigerator . . . it makes the cold • saves your money • and is almost everlasting"

You don't have to be a mechanic to understand why the Norge Rollator cold-making mechanism is a great invention. What the Rollator does—not how it does it—is the important thing. And what it does is simply this:

It delivers more cold for less current—better food preservation at lower overall cost. Its three moving parts form the simplest, most dependable "mechanical heart" Norge engineers have ever found. That's why every Norge Refrigerator is a genuine Rollator Refrigerator, powered by the Norge Rollator Compressor.

The new 1937 Norge Deluxe and Low-Temp models offer the most flexible—the most usable interior shelf arrangements . . . and new styling, new convenience features, in addition to an even further improved Rollator mechanism. See the Norge before you buy!

New Sensational Norge Low-Temp Keeps Foods Prime Fresh 2 to 5 Times Longer

For the first time, all three requirements for perfect home refrigeration are combined in one refrigerator: 1–Temperatures below 40° instead of below 50°. 2–Higher humidity to minimize loss of food moisture. 3–Current cost is no greater than for ordinary electric refrigeration. Norge Low-Temp Rollator Refrigeration also gives you much faster freezing of all ice-cube trays, and a hitherto unknown smoothness in home-made ice cream. Defrosting is practically eliminated. Get full details from your Norge dealer.

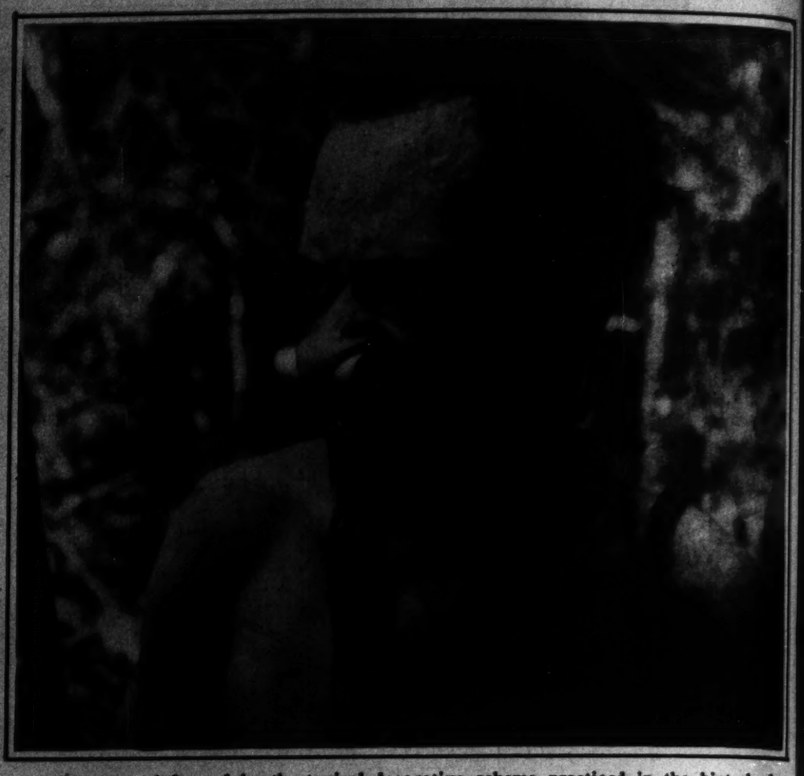
LAST STRONGHOLD OF HEAD-HUNTERS

Aerial view of the River Oriomo and surrounding jungles.



A tribesman deformed by the typical decorative scheme practiced in the hinterland of an island 300,000 square miles in area.

Four of the explorers in a field station, maintaining contact with the party's airplane and base camp by radio. They are Allan Willis, Russell Rogers, George H. H. Tate and Michael Healy.

Photograph is made in the interior of New Guinea during Richard Archbold's expedition on behalf of the American Museum of Natural History. The area explored was hitherto unmapped and is inhabited by naked aborigines whose culture is a relic of the Stone Age. The tribesmen are cannibals; a fact which must have provided the main party of the expedition with matter for reflection when their airplane was wrecked 800 miles inland during a storm. They were rescued while drifting down the Fly River on improvised rafts, and subsequently returned to New York with thousands of valuable specimens.

WAKE UP Mary!

It's a grand old world and you're missing it

YOU'RE a pretty girl, Mary, and you're smart about most things. But you're just a bit stupid about yourself.

You love a good time—but you seldom have one. Evening after evening you sit at home alone.

You've met several grand men who seemed interested at first. They took you out once—and that was that.

WAKE UP, MARY!

There are so many pretty Marys in the world who never seem to sense the real reason for their aloneness.

In this smart modern age, it's against the code for a girl (or a man, either) to carry the repellent odor of underarm perspiration on clothing and person.

It's a fault which never fails to carry its own punishment—unpopularity. And justly. For it is a fault which can be overcome in just half a minute—with Mum!

No bother to use Mum. Just smooth a bit of Mum under each arm—and slip into your dress without a minute lost. No waiting for it to dry; no rinsing off.

Use it at any time; harmless to clothing. If you forget to use Mum before you dress, just use it afterwards. Mum is the only deodorant which holds the Textile Approval Seal of the American Institute of Laundering as being harmless to fabrics.

Soothing and cooling to skin. You'll love this about Mum—you can shave your underarms and use it at once. Even a sensitive skin won't mind!

Effective all day long. Mum never lets you down. Its protection lasts, no matter how strenuous your day or evening.

Does not prevent natural perspiration. Mum just prevents the objectionable part of perspiration—the unpleasant odor—and not the natural perspiration itself.

Don't let neglect cheat you of good times which you were meant to have. The daily Mum habit will keep you safe! Bristol-Myers Co., 630 Fifth Ave., New York.

AT LAST A SAFE "NO-SCRUB" SOAP

Safe For Colors . . . Safe For Hands . . . Yet Soaks Out Dirt In 15 Minutes!

● Each day new thousands are discarding old-type soaps of every sort and switching to OXYDOL—for easier, whiter washes—for utmost safety to hands!

For here, at last, is a "no-scrub, no-boil" laundry soap that's really safe! Developed at the cost of $1,000,000 by the makers of gentle Ivory soap.

As Mrs. Merritt E. Hartley of 1106 North Oxford Street, Indianapolis, Indiana, writes: "OXYDOL soaks the dirt from my clothes so that hard scrubbing or boiling isn't necessary at all. My wash is really white, too—and the kitchen never has that steamy, washday smell. And even in the hardest water, OXYDOL suds are rich and lasting, which makes it economical, also. It's safe for your colored things—never fades them, and isn't at all irritating to the hands."

This is because OXYDOL works on an utterly new principle. Combining speed and safety in a way no single soap has done before, OXYDOL does these 4 amazing things:

(1) Soaks out dirt in 15 minutes, without scrubbing or boiling. Even the "tough" spots come snowy white with a gentle rub between the fingers.

(2) Cuts washing time 25% to 40% in tub or machine.

(3) Gets white clothes 4 to 5 shades whiter, proved by scientific Tintometer tests.

(4) Yet so safe that even sheerest cotton prints washed 100 consecutive times in OXYDOL suds, showed no perceptible sign of fading. And your hands stay soft and white.

OXYDOL is economical, too. Tests show that it will go one-third to one-half again as far as even the latest soap chips on the market. One package often gives twice the suds—does twice the work—lasts twice as long as less modern soaps.

No wonder women everywhere are quitting bars, flakes, chips, and old-type "no-scrub" soaps for this remarkable new discovery that saves so much time and drudgery on washday. Get OXYDOL from your dealer today.

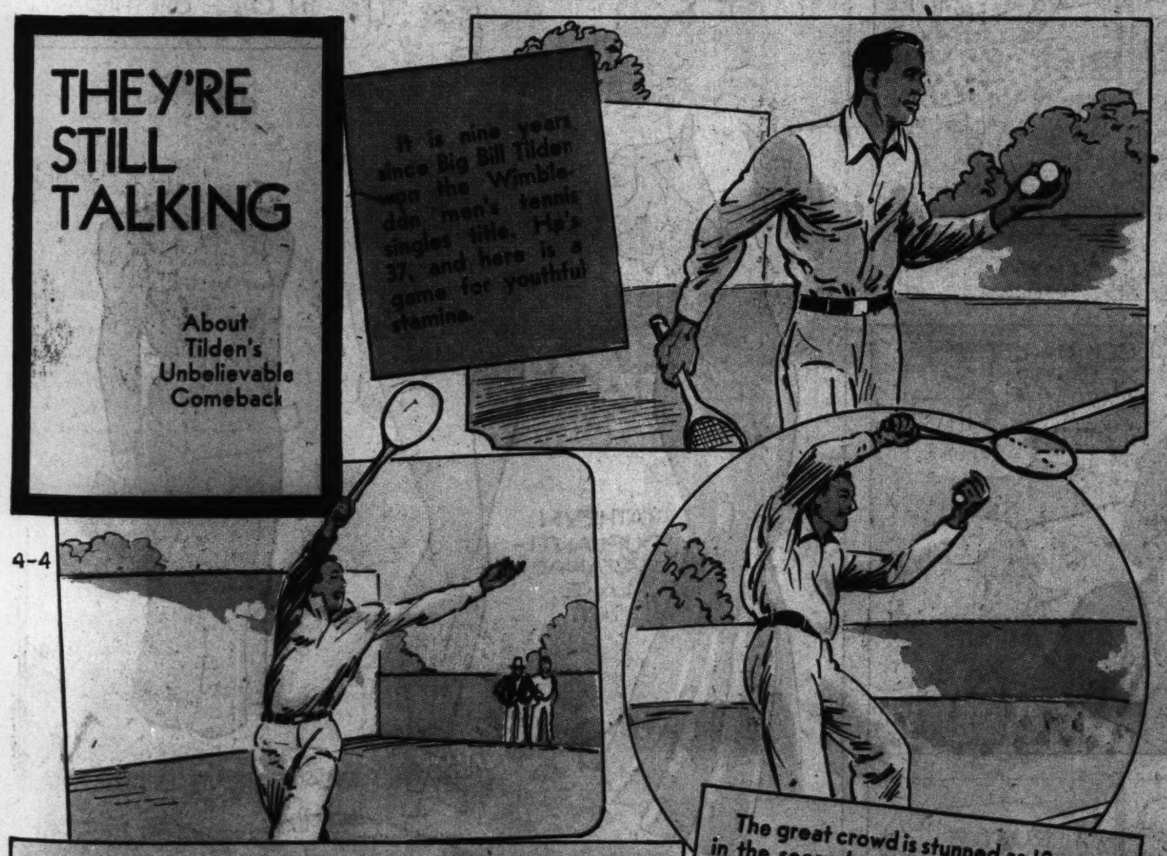
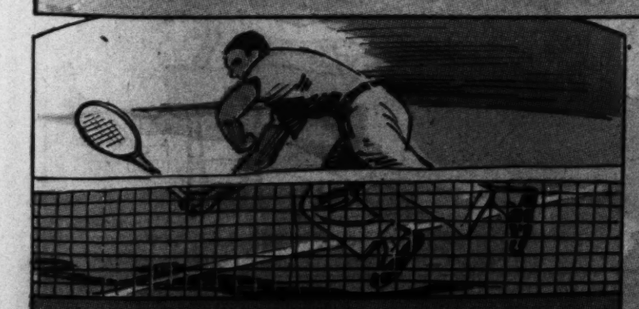
THEY'RE STILL TALKING

About Tilden's Unbelievable Comeback



Without warning the genius of the court flashes all his convincing mastery against Wilmer Allison, the slender Texan, whose speed at times is even more bewildering than Tilden's. .

The great crowd is stunned as 10 games in the second set go clear to deuce on service alone! Here is the ultimate in tennis wizardy!



Penalized for foot-faulting, Allison's defensive stride is lost for a moment and Tilden's astonishing rush to victory cannot be stopped.

It was the smashing service aces which carried the incomparable Bill Tilden to the Wimbledon singles throne July 5, 1930, in one of the greatest sports comebacks of all time. The sets were 6-3, 9-7, 6-4.

Soccer . . . . . By NED BRANT

Passing

The ball is not lifted from the ground in passing it around the circle. Stop it and pass it to the next player by stopping it first and passing it with either side of either foot, depending on which way the pass is directed.

Zigzag Passing

A sort of game may be played by giving one point to the squad first completing a series of passes. Pass to the right with the inside of the left foot or the outside of the right foot, and vice versa.

Both these drills teach manipulation of the ball. Acquisition of skill in fundamentals is of singular importance.

Ovaltine-at-night (or whenever a passenger wants it) is another pioneering development of this largest airline company in the United States.

You can get Ovaltine on any transcontinental American Airlines Flagship by simply asking the stewardess for it.

When taken as a hot bedtime beverage, Ovaltine has aided thousands and thousands of people to get to sleep quicker and to enjoy a more restful night's slumber. Here is the way its action is explained:

1. It tends to draw blood down from the brain to the stomach. This helps to "compose" the mind for sleep.

2. It gives the stomach a light digestive job to do, and so helps relieve that hollow, restless feeling which keeps so many people awake.

Not only does Ovaltine promote quicker sleep, it gives a more restful quality of slumber, many users report. They wake up feeling better, they say.

Ovaltine is not a drug but a food. It is approved by doctors. It has benefited so many, don't you agree it is worth a trial?

See if it won't help you sleep better and gain renewed energy! Get a can at your grocery or drug store.

WOMEN MARVEL AT THESE BETTER-THAN-EVER WORK-SAVING SUDS

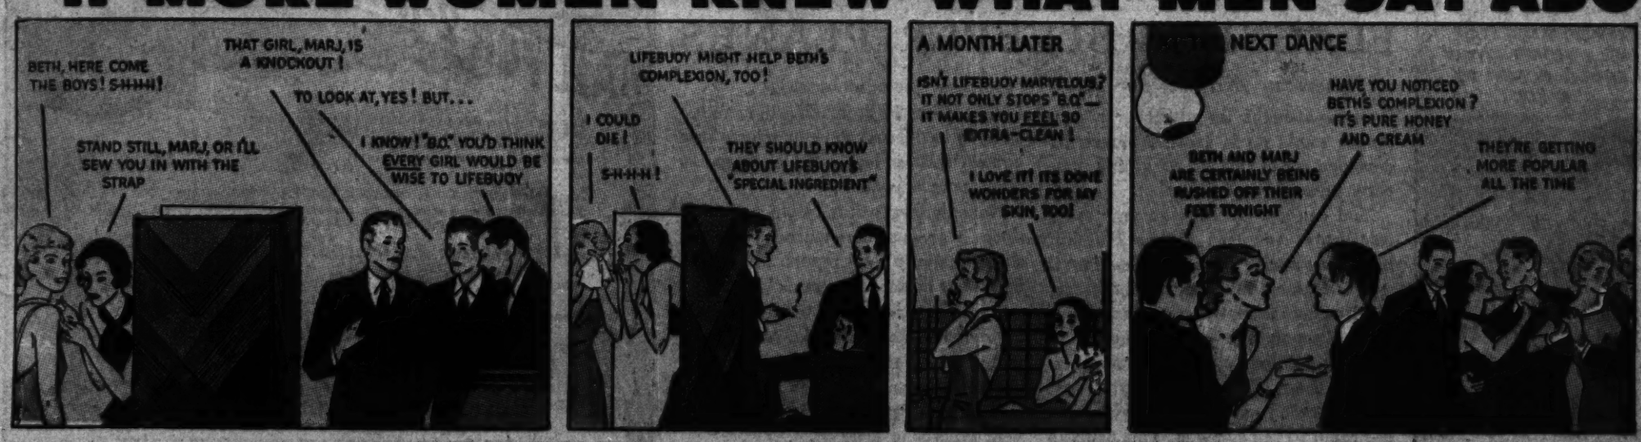
IF MORE WOMEN KNEW WHAT MEN SAY ABOUT THEM....



120,000 WOMEN REVEAL THEIR BATH SECRETS

MORE American women use Lifebuoy for the bath than any other soap, and Lifebuoy is equally the favorite of men and children. 120,000 interviews by eight leading magazines reveal this fact.

What better evidence that Lifebuoy is a great bath soap! It stops "B.O."—it agrees with the skin—its gentle lather contains a special purifying ingredient not found in other popular soaps. Scientific tests show Lifebuoy is 20 percent milder than many so-called "beauty" and "baby soaps." Many women who have begun the use of Lifebuoy to stop "B.O." will use nothing else for their complexions.
